Along The Dark Shore:

A Crawl on Dark Shores (A Pact with Demons, Story #11) Michael R.E. Adams, Around the Mountain Hugh Hood, 1994 The republication of a book which is among the finest that Hugh Hood one of Canada's most sophisticated and accomplished authors has ever written Around the Mountain Scenes from Montreal Life is in the words of John Metcalf an almost perfect achievement Around the Mountain is a documentary fantasy portrait of Montreal its people politics folkways geography and appearance as they were in the heady days of Expo 67 These twelve short narratives form a cyclical encyclopaedic account of a dozen quarters of the city that literally circle around the peak of the low hill that Montrealers call the mountain As Hood recalls in the new introduction to the book I wanted to give a kind of fossil like existence to something that was in the process of being born and simultaneously passing away It is fascinating to me to go through these twelve stories to judge what has remained in place and what has been swept away and forgotten Every reader who knows Montreal will have an opinion about this But some things have remained unmistakably in place Around the Mountain is populated with people and their stories from the misadventures of a convivial defenceman called Fred Carpenter to the angelic messenger Angela Mary Robinson whose bicultural message of love and understanding nobody understands to Victor LaTourelle who is haunted as so many of us in the late twentieth century are haunted by the past
