

West Street, c. 1940. Some of the shops down the right-hand side of the street have now been demolished. A man walks, hand in pocket, with his shopping bag. Is he contemplating a well-told tale of the local history? As the sun falls, shadows are cast. Lovely old cars line either side of the street. There were all wearing glasses, the camera wearing sunglasses too and to cross the road. All of this suggests that it is summer time. A bicycle, with the basket full of shopping, sits on the pavement. Their carefree post-war years did not seem to be a distant memory and perhaps the bicycle could be the last of its kind in the town. Is the little boy starting towards the pub his son? Has the lad been sent on his own to buy his father back home? (Fareham Museum Museum)

The Eagle and neighbouring shops, West Street, Fareham, 1940. (Fareham Museum Museum)

West Street, 2006. The area where the people are crossing the road in the earlier photograph is now pedestrianised and today a tree stands in place of the bollard and the 'keep left' sign. The Eagle Hotel still stands virtually unchanged but its name has been changed to the Brass Monkey. It is now a pub rather than a hotel. The signpost to the left of the old photograph pointing to Southampton, Lee-on-Solent and Gosport on the A11 have been removed, because this street is now only one way to traffic coming into the town. The lovely old buildings on the right of the earlier photograph have been replaced by ghastly characterless post-war structures. How did the planners get away with that? (Tim Saunders)

A detail of the art nouveau windows that grace the Brass Monkey public house, 2006. The tiles above the window still look fresh and appealing. (Tim Saunders)

Saving Britain's Art Treasures N. J. McCamley, 2003-03-19 This book explains for the first time the full story of the wartime adventures of Britain's greatest art treasures At first the pictures and other artifacts were distributed amongst a number of large country houses Initially the owners of these houses almost fought one another for the right to house the Treasures Later when further accommodation was needed for treasures from the provincial museums the tables turned and the Office of Works was reduced to bribing owners by promising that they would be spared billets and that their houses would be immune from requisitioning By mid 1940 however circumstances transpired that made the country houses untenable German air bases in northern France made the whole of Britain vulnerable Eventually two deep underground repositories were constructed one in Wales and one in Wiltshire and by the end of 1942 virtually all the cultural heritage of the nation was concentrated there Building and operation of these underground treasure houses did not however go smoothly as described here
