Siegfried,2016-12-05 The late nineteenth century witnessed unprecedented levels of urban growth as migration swelled the population of European cities to new heights The resulting problems of overcrowding and inadequate civic utilities prompted the governing elites to look for new planning solutions to address the needs of an increasingly urbanised society At the same time young people were also increasingly recognised as being adversely affected both politically and morally by the on going process of urbanization Church groups civic authorities middle class reformers and political movements all tried to steer youth toward their own concept of respectable behaviour concepts that often tended to share many similarities in their paternalistic emphasis upon social discipline This volume directly addresses the confluence of these issues the point at which the city government youth and public space meet and the resulting problems and tensions that were often created Whether it be the corruption of the rural youth flooding into the cities at the beginning of the twentieth century battles between Hitler Youth and working class gangs in Nazi Germany hooliganism in 1950s Hungary or the appropriation of or withdrawal from public spaces by youths in more recent times all the chapters in this book explore ways in which authorities and adult groups have sought to control young people both directly and indirectly Drawing on a broad selection of methods and disciplines a wide variety of case studies from across Europe are used to investigate the interactions between youth and authority and show how these adapted and changed over time and in different countries By taking a fresh look at these issues within a comparative framework this volume furthers our understanding of modern European society during the twentieth century

Masculinity, Marriage and Rural Men in Urban China Sarah Gosper, 2024-12-31 This book explores the conjuncture and interrelationship between three so called crises facing Chinese society a crisis of marriage a crisis of masculinity and a crisis of mobility Based on sustained ethnographic research on unmarried lower class rural men from two distinct social and class categories namely migrant workers employed in the food delivery and express mail delivery industries and tertiary educated white collar professionals the book reveals how the increasing socio economic precarity of rural men and their largely unrealised desires to marry and have children demonstrates a fundamental reconfiguration of Chinese masculinity and mobility in urban China and the social impact on central Chinese institutions The book also reveals the futile efforts to fulfil hegemonic models of masculinity in contemporary China and addresses the heterogeneity of unmarried lower class rural men as they navigate marriage manhood and mobility Exploring gender relations in China and contributing to global studies of heterosexual masculinities this book will appeal to students and scholars of Chinese culture and society gender studies and social anthropology
