Aldous,1981 Tackling In-work Poverty by Supporting Dual-earning Families Kayte Lawton,2013 This report considers how in work poverty among couples with children could be tackled by increasing the number of dual earner families Having both partners in work protects most families against poverty even when wages are low The report argues that although employment levels are expected to rise considerably over the next decade the impact on poverty will be muted unless it becomes easier for both partners in a couple to work Page 1 Careers of Couples in Contemporary Society : From

Religion and Family in a Changing Society Penny Edgell, 2006 The 1950s religious boom was organized around the male breadwinner lifestyle in the burgeoning postwar suburbs But since the 1950s family life has been fundamentally reconfigured in the United States How do religion and family fit together today This book examines how religious congregations in America have responded to changes in family structure and how families participate in local religious life Based on a study of congregations and community residents in upstate New York sociologist Penny Edgell argues that while some religious groups may be nostalgic for the Ozzie and Harriet days others are changing knowing that fewer and fewer families fit this traditional pattern In order to keep members with nontraditional family arrangements within the congregation these innovators have sought to emphasize individual freedom and personal spirituality and actively to welcome single adults and those from nontraditional families Edgell shows that mothers and fathers seek involvement in congregations for different reasons Men tend to think of congregations as social support structures and to get involved as a means of participating in the lives of their children. Women by contrast are more often motivated by the quest for religious experience and can adapt more readily to pluralist ideas about family structure. This Edgell concludes may explain the attraction of men to more conservative congregations and women to nontraditional religious groups.

Careers of Couples in Contemporary Society: From Male Breadwinner to Dual-Earner Families Hans-Peter Blossfeld, 2001. This is the first systematic international comparative study of the transformation of couples' careers in modern societies. The countries included are Germany, the Netherlands, the Flemish part of Belgium, Italy, Spain, Great Britain, the United States, Sweden, Denmark, Poland, Hungary, and China. Using longitudinal data, this book explores what has and what has not changed for couples in various countries due to women's greater involvement in paid employment. It provides evidence that despite substantial improvement in women's educational attainment and career opportunities in all the countries studied, dimensions of role specialization in dual earner couples have not undergone transformation to the same extent. Gender role change within the family has generally been asymmetric so that housework and childcare primarily remain women's work. There are however also significant institutional differences among modern societies which determine a country's timing, speed, and pattern of change from the traditional male breadwinner to the dual earner family model. In particular, the impact of males' resources on their female partners' employment careers is dependent on the welfare state regime. In conservative and Mediterranean welfare state regimes, women's paid employment is negatively correlated with the occupational position of their husbands. In liberal welfare state regimes, no impact of husbands' resources on their wives' labour force participation could be detected. In the social democratic welfare state regime and generally in former socialist countries, husbands' resources have a positive effect on their wives' employment so that occupational resources cumulate in dual earner families.
