Superstitions about Animals Frank Gibson, 2016-08-02 From the INTRODUCTORY It would be interesting to know at what period of the world's history and under what circumstances mankind first attributed to certain members of the animal kingdom powers and functions above and beyond those which they possess through the wisdom of their Creator Was there indeed ever a period when the proper and natural position of each creature was intelligently understood by all mankind and superstition and credulity were non-existent If ever there was such a blissful time and it is reasonable to suppose that in a Divine creation there must have been how came natural facts of the animal world to be distorted into unreasonable fiction How came legends and omens and monstrosities into existence Did they arise from men's sinfulness and fear or were they the outcome of fertile imaginations desirous of adding to the wonders of Creation These are questions that come involuntarily to my mind as I gaze over the great field which my subject embraces and see the appalling superstition which is rampant in regard to the animal kingdom For very much of it there is an explanation men's lamentable ignorance concerning the nature and habits of the various creatures which have been provided for our use and the adornment of the world But this explanation does not cover the whole range of superstition It does not provide a solution to the widespread acceptance of omens and signs or the popular belief in marvelous creatures which have had existence only in unhealthy imagination The belief in omens and signs is not governed by education or a want of it A man may have all the education which his age can supply and his knowledge of natural history may be in keeping with his other mental acquirements yet he may be as superstitious as the most uncultured and unlearned In the same way a man who understands all the good points of a dog and can explain to you why this part of a certain specimen is too prominent or why that part ought to be fuller or more angular may nevertheless implicitly believe that the baying of a dog is an infallible sign of an approaching demise Nor is superstition in respect of the animal kingdom limited to any age or any people In all ages so far as we are able to discover except that which the Creator blessed with His approval and among all tribes and tongues superstition has existed in some of its varied forms and I think I may safely include the present age among the rest For the amount of ignorance which is still rife in regard to animals the antiquated ideas which still prevail the threadbare oft-times ludicrous fables which are still believed in do not mark the dawn of the twentieth century as being much more advanced than the first so far as superstitions about animals are concerned As in the days of Greek and Roman predominance the raven and the owl and in a less degree the crow are still regarded as birds of augury and while cats in ancient Egypt were exalted to the high estate of deity the black members of the tribe in our own country are placed above their fellows on account of the good fortune which is said to attend them and cats of every colour serve as infallible barometers
