Animals And Their Niches How Species Share Resources:

Animals and Their Niches Laurence P. Pringle, 1977-01-01 Discusses the sharing of food and other resources among species of animals that live in the same community Catalog of Copyright Entries. Third Series Library of Congress. Copyright Office, 1979 The Ekistics of Animal and Human Conflict Rishi Dev, 2016-09-01 Urban wildlife management is a town planning subject It is logical and important to relate the animal and human conflict seen all over the world as a phenomenon which is applicable to all types of human settlements despite the diversities and complexities of cultures societal structures laws value systems religions and so on A universal principle or theory governs and applies to all cities which define these conditions and phenomena creating the conflict or coexistence This book investigates the niches of one of the key urban animals from a syntactic semantic and pragmatic perspective and explores how these niches are naturally synonymous to similar patterns structures and compositions within human settlements It explores and defines the demographic patterns thresholds and phenomenon which leads to formation of the different levels and extremes of interaction between the species This forms a paradigm which classifies this conflict within the various disciplines and frameworks of urban ecology The focus is primarily on urban dogs it being a keystone species but is later related with other urban animals as well The premise for this approach is that history has shown how certain species have persuasively coexisted with humans for so many millennia yet a conflict happens between animals and humans and within humans over animals It is thus logical to believe that the forces which create this conflict cannot solely be natural to the species in question and have to come from outside from the settlement patterns of both species and the net resultant force and dynamics The book looks at these dichotomies in four distinct but interrelated ways It delves deep inside four niches which form the dynamics of any settlement spatial cultural ecological and economic and explores all scales at which the succession and evolution of animals take place in highly urbanized settlements Textbook of Forest Science Asim Kumar Mandal, Abel Nicodemus, 2025-02-14 This textbook presents the latest knowledge on various disciplines of forestry science presented in 39 chapters Each chapter presents a reappraisal of theory and practice applications and future scope of subject area It is a single point reference for updated information on both traditional and contemporary areas of forestry Some of the disciplines covered in the book are biotechnology remote sensing forest certification forest management forest hydrology climate change plantation and urban forestry biodiversity and genetic resources conservation wildfire science seed science and quality seed production and ecosystem services The book primarily serves as an advanced textbook of forest science for students of forestry at all levels The science of forestry is receiving much more attention of the researchers policy makers and public than ever before because of growing awareness of vital importance of forests in amelioration of world environment This book is a comprehensive collection of existing and new methods including outcome and future possibilities of forest science This book benefits undergraduate and postgraduate students professional researchers teachers practicing

Diseases at the Wildlife - Livestock Interface Joaquín Vicente, Kurt C. Vercauteren, Christian Gortázar, 2021-04-29 Shared diseases among wildlife livestock and humans often transboundary are relevant to public health and global economy as being highlighted currently relative to the global COVID19 pandemic Diseases at these interfaces also impact the conservation of biodiversity and must be considered when managing wildlife While wildlife and domestic livestock have coexisted in dynamic systems for thousands of years spillover disease risks are higher today than in the past due to global patterns of increasing close contact and interactions among wildlife livestock and humans in the context of complex diverse and numerous circumstances Multidisciplinary studies of animal interfaces especially those involving wildlife therefore must be brought to the forefront so that knowledge gaps can be realized and filled to inform managers and policy makers In the first part of the book authors illustrate and discuss ecological and epidemiological concepts related to the interfaces with a vision towards socio ecological system health In addition the history of past animal interfaces provides the necessary perspective to focus current questions better understand present situations and informs how we can best approach the future The second part discusses the myriad of similar and differing wildlife livestock interfaces found around the world from a regional point of view The third part focuses on how to assess the spatial and temporal overlap between livestock and wildlife and authors present new technical innovations about how inter transmissions between wild and domestic populations can be quantified An overview of main modeling approaches available to quantify multi host disease transmission at the wildlife livestock interface illustrated with specific case studies is also presented Finally the need for interdisciplinary approaches and a dedicated thematic field to approach the wildlife livestock interfaces and create opportunities to promote wildlife livestock coexistence is emphasized The concluding chapter presents perspectives and directions to better understanding disease dynamics at the wildlife livestock interface global change and implications for the future The changing distribution of interfaces ongoing human and environmental changes e g climate warming changes in animal production systems etc and their likely impacts and consequences for the interfaces and disease transmission processes are all discussed

Community Structure and the Niche Paul Giller, 2012-12-06 During the past two decades there has been a gradual change of emphasis in ecological studies directed at unravelling the complexity of natural communities Initially the population approach was used where interest lay in the way individual populations change and in the identification of factors affecting these changes A good understanding of the dynamics of single populations is now emerging but this has not been a very fruitful approach at the community level In the natural world few species can be treated as isolated populations as most single species are the interacting parts of multispecies systems This has led to a community approach involving the study of interrelationships between species within communities and investigation of the actual organization of natural communities as a whole The formalization of a number of new concepts and ideas has evolved from this approach including niche theory resource allocation guild structure limiting similarity niche width and overlap etc which until fairly recently have been examined mainly from a theoretical point of view However a wealth of field data is gradually being added to the literature especially from the general areas of island biogeography and resource partitioning amongst closely related species Community structure embodies patterns of resource allocation and spatial and temporal abundance of species of the community as well as community level properties such as trophic levels succession nutrient cycling etc
