Blackfeet Tales of Glacier National Park

James Willard Schultz, 2017-04-21 To day we pitched our lodges under Rising Wolf Mountain that massive sky piercing snow crested height of red and gray rock which slopes up so steeply from the north shore of Upper Two Medicine Lake This afternoon we saw upon it some two or three thousand feet up toward its rugged crest a few bighorn and a Rocky Mountain goat But we may not kill them Said Tail Feathers Coming over the Hill There they are Our meat but the whites have taken them from us even as they have taken everything else that is ours And so we are eating beef where once we feasted upon the rich ribs and loins of game which tasted all the better because we trailed and killed it and with no little labor brought it to the womenfolk in camp Rising Wolf Mountain What a fitting and splendid monument it is to the first white man to traverse the foothills of the Rockies between the Saskatchewan and the Missouri Hugh Monroe was his English name His father was Captain Hugh Monroe of the English army his mother was Am lie de la Roche a daughter of a noble family of French migr s Hugh Monroe Junior was born in Montreal in 1798 In 1814 he received permission to enter the employ of the Hudson s Bay Company and one year later in the summer of 1815 he arrived at its new post Mountain Fort on the North Fork of the Saskatchewan and close to the foothills of the Rockies At that time the Company had but recently entered Blackfeet territory and none of its engag s understood their language an interpreter was needed and the Factor appointed Monroe to fit himself for the position
