to Washington Melissa Crawley, 2014-06-26 Before the unprecedented televised presidential debates of 1960, most Americans were able to relate to their leaders in little more than an historical context. In the era of televised elections, however, the media have allowed Americans to witness the paternal moral and intellectual qualities of their president up close. Television has been so critical to this process of political socialization that for many Americans, the televised image of the president is the president. As the acclaimed television drama The West Wing demonstrates, fictional representations of the presidency can also be significant civic forces. This book examines how film and television drama contribute to shaping the presidency and the way most Americans understand it, and particularly the processes of political education. The text discusses The West Wing's didactic potential, its representation of White House politics, and its depiction of race and gender, with commentary on how fictional representations of the presidency become important elements of American political consciousness.

The Political and Civic Socialization of Children Terry Lutes, 1981 Discourse and Culture Alun Munslow, 2013-04-03 Written history is literary artifact; taking this as its starting point, Discourse and Culture argues that the Foucauldian concept of the shifting scale of linguistic and historic values must be the central focus for a new interpretation of American culture and ideology. Six major American historical figures are evaluated as products of the conflict between subordinate and dominant influences in American society: steelmaster Andrew Carnegie, labour leader Terence V. Powderly, historian of the West Frederick J. Turner, social reconstructionist Jane Addams, race leader Booker T. Washington, and black nationalist W. E. B. Du Bois. Discourse and Culture re-assesses the relationship between ideology and cultural formation by asking if cultural change can be explained as a function of discourse. The book draws upon the ideas of Althusser, Gramsci, and Hayden to address this issue, which lies at the very heart of contemporary debate on the character of cultural history.

followers are influenced by leaders and what psychological dynamics exist between leaders and their subordinates and in the process redefines the phenomenon of leadership Exploring the emotional connections that bind charismatic leaders and those who support them he contends that this multifaceted relationship is based on reciprocal need By focusing on prominent figures throughout history who have altered the lives of their followers in profound ways Popper shows how these leaders reinvented and disseminated value systems for good e g Nelson Mandela but often for ill e g Hitler Whether the influence of a charismatic leader is destructive and negative or constructive and positively transformative this intriguing work argues that the reciprocal process that takes place between leader and follower as well as key formative events in the lives of leaders are surprisingly similar Using such famous and infamous leaders as Mahatma Gandhi Nelson Madela Franklin Delano Roosevelt Hitler Charles Manson and Jim Jones Popper defines and explores three types of leader follower relationships Regressive relationships which are characterized by mutual dependence Symbolic relationships which are rooted in symbolic meaning Developmental transformational relationships which permit positive moral and emotional development
