INTRODUCTION

Because of high death rates in the United States due to motor vehicle (MV) accidents and violence—causes of death that disproportionately strike the young—the problem of premature death is truly an American tragedy. These two causes of death also are the major causes of the injuries that trauma centers were established to treat.

Some 20% of the deaths among injury victims who were treated at community hospitals could have been prevented if those patients had been taken to trauma centers instead. A trauma center offers the round-the-clock presence of an experienced trauma surgeon and the immediate availability of the key specialists—anesthesiologists and neurosurgeons—needed to provide definitive surgical treatment. But, the establishment of trauma centers does little good unless severely injured patients are brought to them instead of to other hospitals. The concept of a trauma system refers to the integration of pre-hospital emergency medical services (EMS), hospital care, and posthospitalization rehabilitation programs.

Hundreds of self-styled trauma centers have been established in the United States, and most states have at least initiated plans to develop trauma systems.
