Müller,Anne Eckert,P. Hemachandra Reddy,2020-01-21 The purpose of this Research Topic is to discuss the latest developments in aging and neurodegenerative diseases Aging represents the major risk factor of the two most relevant neurodegenerative diseases Parkinson s disease PD and Alzheimer s disease AD It is generally accepted that symptoms of PD correlate with the severity of degeneration of dopaminergic substantia nigra neurons In most cases neuronal loss during aging is not sufficient to cause clinical symptoms but only leads to a preclinical state of PD However in a small number of our population neurodegeneration by aging gets accelerated by individual e g brain injuries environmental e g toxins and genetic e g mutations of the alpha synuclein gene factors to reach the critical threshold for clinical symptoms during lifetime Thus neurodegeneration in PD appears to represent the common final pathway of normal brain aging and all other risk factors including genetics and the accumulation of the neurotoxic alpha synuclein protein While aging alone is generally agreed to be sufficient for at least the preclinical state of PD the situation in AD seems to be different Aging as the major and well documented risk factor of AD has been neglected for decades Biochemical mechanisms of brain aging and the cognitive deficits of normal brain aging were seen as two not related and independent processes not related to AD AD has always been characterized for decades by the presence of histopathological alterations extracellular amyloid containing plaques and intracellular tangles of hyperphosphorylated tau protein by neurodegeneration synaptic deficits and finally neuronal loss as well as by severe cognitive deficits clinically often accompanied by neuropsychiatric symptoms like delusions as already described in the first famous patient Auguste D at the Psychiatric Hospital of Frankfurt If or if not one or both of the two histopathological hallmarks play a causative role remains unclear until now The discovery of homozygotic risk genes in most of the very rare probably less than 1% cases of early onset AD which share increased production of amyloid A as one but probably not the only one common property led to the hypothesis of A as the major causative factor for the development of AD It was neglected that plaques density in the brain of AD patients did not correlate with presence and severity of clinical symptoms while synaptic deficits did so even in first observations already published many years ago Based on the Amyloid hypothesis many drug treatments to remove A plaques were developed Even if all seemed to remove A to some extent all strategies failed to improve the symptoms of dementia Thus other concepts to explain the development of clinical symptoms of AD over time are needed These should include the brain aging process not only as a statistical but also as a causative contributing factor These concepts should not only rely on cell or animal models but should much more take into account the disease and the patients A closer look at the situation in PD will certainly be helpful

Les Institutions de l'Empire byzantin Louis Bréhier, 2008-10-01 Ce volume s'attache à étudier de la société en analysant les structures et les fonctions Louis Bréhier parle de l'expérience sociologique que représente l'histoire de Byzance Expérience qui aurait pu se poursuivre bien plus longtemps si les principes politiques qui firent sa grandeur n'avaient pas été abandonnés au XI^e siècle Le progrès de l'absolutisme basé sur la puissance de l'armée avait déjà conduit Rome à la catastrophe La nouveauté par rapport à Rome c'est que Byzance avait une mission spirituelle la conversion de Constantin lui enjoignait de soumettre tous les peuples et de faire régner le christianisme sur toute la terre Autour du souverain il y avait l'Administration le Palais dont les préoccupations essentielles semblent avoir été l'étiquette la pompe des cérémonies les titres et le luxe des costumes Le lecteur sera étonné et émerveillé par les pages si documentées que Louis Bréhier consacre ces questions importantes Des chapitres sont consacrés aux grands Services de l'État dont le mécanisme est soigneusement examiné la justice les finances la diplomatie la poste impériale l'armée et la défense de l'Empire la marine impériale En mille ans les modes d'administration les mœurs politiques ont bien souvent changé mais pas toujours hâtivement dans le bon sens La dernière partie de l'ouvrage analyse le statut et le rôle de l'église Byzance comme pour tout état médiéval chrétien ou musulman les institutions civiles et religieuses sont liées intimement Il y eut enfin dans les derniers siècles le
