Issues and Reviews in Teratology H. Kalter, 2012-12-06 Why Efforts to Expand the Meaning of Teratogen Are Unacceptable Disagreement about nomenclature in teratology is not new Dissent even about the very fabric of the discipline what congenital malformations consist of has often been voiced Time instead of resolving such difficulties has sometimes worsened them For example in the past it was agreed that congenital malformations are abnormalities of structure present at birth but differences of opinion concerning where the line between normal and abnormal was to be drawn prevailed It was obvious that in order to discover the causes of congenital malformations and cast strategies for their prevention it would be necessary to have knowledge of the baseline of their frequency and that this required uniformity of definition of terms Since malformations of primary social concern are those having grave outcomes and are paradoxically also the commonest ones it is logical that such conditions were the first consideration of investigators and were the defects whose frequency was considered to comprise the required baseline In Vitro Methods in Developmental Toxicology Gary L. Kimmel, Devendra M. Kochhar, 2019-06-04 First Published in 1990 this text brings together the work of several investigators who used in vitro techniques to probe the nature of embryonic cell response to a diverse group of chemical agents It focuses on the approaches limitations usefulness and applicability of defining mechanisms underlying altered development This work includes discussions on pharmacodynamic principles and placental transfer mechanisms It also examines the potential for in vitro systems to serve as an adjunct to the risk assessment process Ideal for both the layman and the expert in this area this volume provides a general understanding of the types of approaches that can be used and specific approaches in investigating altered development Dosimetry for Risk Assessment, 1994 The Physiology of Human Growth James Mourilyan Tanner, Michael A. Idea to Product Nancy J. Alexander,Anne C. Wentz,2012-12-06 The young investigator with an idea has to negotiate many institutional federal and industrial challenges in order to get a product to market Nowhere is described the steps in the development of new drugs diagnostics or devices the person with an idea has nowhere to turn for information and details The young investigator may understand the elements of basic and clinical research but ordinarily has no insight into novel ways of finding research funding or how to explore to find the funding opportunities that are available The young investigator has little knowledge of the mechanisms to bring an idea through the developmental phases to the market There are other players in this complex endeavor with whom he or she has no contact including those from industry the Food and Drug Administration and the legal community Exposure to the philosophy of product development and to procedural information would be useful to the scientific community as would contact with those who have successfully taken an idea to a finished product A first attempt to do this was the symposium on Idea to Product The Process sponsored by Serono Symposia USA and held November 17 to 20 1994 in Washington D C This book comprises the proceedings of that meeting The editors are indebted to the many contributors to this volume and we are especially grateful to Serono Symposia USA and to Leslie Nies and her staff for their expertise in organizing the symposium
