Department of Defense Appropriations for 1990: Military manpower United States. Congress. House. Committee on Appropriations. Subcommittee on Department of Defense,1989 The Defense Budget of the People's Republic of China Richard A. Bitzinger, Chong-Pin Lin,1994 As Asia looms larger in Western and particularly U S security calculations interest in the People s Republic of China PRC as a potential Security concern has grown As China attempts to modernize its forces is it becoming a threat to Western security in the region and if so does it constitute a direct military threat How successful have the Chinese been in upgrading their armed forces How capable is China of projecting its forces beyond its borders In attempting to answer these questions it would be useful to know where current Chinese strategic and military priorities lay and whether the PRC is investing enough resources in these priorities to constitute a serious security concern for the West Since defense budgets are often a critical indicator of national defense priorities and policies Western interest in Chinese defense spending has also grown considerably The size of its defense budget the rate of growth or decline in its military expenditures and what it spends its defense dollars on can reveal much about a country s national security intentions and military plans Defense budgets are usually an indicator of a country s military modernization priorities and what future military capabilities it might possess They can also serve as a gauge of a country s defense commitment and resolve or its potential to threaten others Department of Defense Appropriations for Fiscal Year 1990: National security United States.
