Creating Community in the City Ruth Landman, 1993-06-30 Landman studies four communally oriented settings in Washington's urban environment Through ethnographic field work she learned that cooperation sociability and self management overcame the common urban challenges posed by isolation and largely impersonal single purpose contact with others The settings were a cooperative food store a cooperative bakery community gardens and a cooperatively owned low cost housing project Landman shows how the participants in these economically related activities are socially bound together in a web of relations considered unusual in large American cities and how these exceptionally connected urban lives prove very satisfactory

Environmentalism Unbound Robert Gottlieb,2002-08-02 A call for a broadened environmental movement that addresses issues of everyday life In Environmentalism Unbound Robert Gottlieb proposes a new strategy for social and environmental change that involves reframing and linking the movements for environmental justice and pollution prevention According to Gottlieb the environmental movement's narrow conception of environment has isolated it from vital issues of everyday life such as workplace safety healthy communities and food security that are often viewed separately as industrial community or agricultural concerns This fragmented approach prevents an awareness of how these issues are also environmental issues After tracing a history of environmental perspectives on land and resources city and countryside and work and industry Gottlieb focuses on three compelling examples of this new approach to social and environmental change The first involves a small industry dry cleaning and the debate over pollution prevention approaches the second involves a set of products janitorial cleaning supplies that may be hazardous to workers and the third explores the obstacles and opportunities presented by community or regional approaches to food supply in the face of an increasingly globalized food system
