Abstract

Background Health and care workers (HCW) faced the double burden of the SARS-CoV-2 pandemic as members of a society affected by a public health emergency and as HCW who experienced fear of becoming infected and of infecting others, stigma, violence, increased workloads, changes in scope of practice, among others. To understand the short and long-term impacts in terms of the COVID-19 pandemic and other public health emergencies of international concern (PHEICs) on HCW and relevant interventions to address them, we designed and conducted a living systematic review (LSR).

Methods We reviewed literature retrieved from MEDLINE—PubMed, Embase, SCOPUS, LILACS, the World Health Organization COVID-19 database, the ClinicalTrials.org and the ILO database, published from January 2000 until December 2021. We included quantitative observational studies, experimental studies, quasi-experimental, mixed methods or qualitative studies; addressing mental, physical health and well-being and quality of life. The review targeted HCW; and interventions and exposures, implemented during the COVID-19 pandemic or other PHEICs. To assess the risk of bias of included studies, we used the Johanna Briggs Institute (JBI) Critical Appraisal Tools. Data were qualitatively synthesized using meta-aggregation and meta-analysis was performed to estimate pooled prevalence of some of the outcomes.

Results The 1013 studies included in the review were mainly quantitative research, cross-sectional, with medium risk of bias/quality, addressing at least one of the following: mental health issue, violence, physical health and well-being, and quality of life. Additionally, interventions to address short- and long-term impact of PHEICs on HCW included in the review, although scarce, were mainly behavioral and individual oriented, aimed at improving mental health

Living Wills United States. Congress. Senate. Committee on Finance. Subcommittee on Medicare and Long-Term Care,1991 Living with the Dead J. Jeremy Wisniewski,2023-04-14 This book explores the moral place of the dead in our lives and in our afterlives It argues that our lives are saturated by the past intentions and values of the dead and that we offer the dead a form of modest immortality by fulfilling our obligations to remember them In the first part of the book the author examines the scope and limits of our obligations to the dead Our obligations to respect the wishes of the dead are more substantial than commonly acknowledged but they can be overridden in a range of cases when they conflict with the vital interests of the living such as in organ donation and wealth inheritance By contrast the author contends that the obligation to remember at least collectively cannot be completely overridden In the second part of the book the author argues that tradition offers the dead a form of modest immortality the dead live on insofar as we enact those intentional states with which they most identified He draws on the Confucian view of ritual to argue that ritual absorption reincarnates the dead in the actions of the living Finally the author defends a Jamesian account of a pluralistic self that is consistent with the view that we have obligations to the individual dead and that the selves of the dead are pragmatic constructions Living with the Dead
