11.1 Introduction

Food processing sector in India has largest segment of bakery with more than 1.3 million tonnes of production from organized sector and 1.7 million tons from 1,000,000 unorganized sectors. India is second largest producer of biscuits globally. Our bakery industry is positioned third in generation of revenues among processed food sector.

Bakery products have gained popularity worldwide as well as in India due to various advantages including comparatively low price, evolving habits of masses, universal availability, convenience etc. In India, bakery products are classified majorly into three segments; bread, cakes and biscuits. The changing demand of public has contributed in bringing new trends in bakery industry. For instance, people prefer healthier options with whole-grain ingredients, fibre and antioxidant enrichment and fortification. New labels like gluten free, organic, natural and free of chemicals, allergen free have found an upsurge demand in market. Most of the bakeries in India are manual or semi-automatic in nature. There is dearth of good fully automatic bakeries. Trends in India predict preference of common man for freshly baked local bakery goods. The industry is facing lot of challenges with regards to automation, innovation, technology and hygiene measures. There is an increasing competition in market and to win the battle up gradation in manufacturing & packaging systems is needed. There is dearth of good bakery training institutes thus skilled manpower.

Cakes, pastries and muffins are few of the bakery products that are in huge demand in India. According to a statistical study, production volume of cakes, pastries and muffins for fiscal year 2018 was found at 10 metric tons. Compared
