Minor, R. Thomas Campbell, 2007-01-19 When the Civil War began the southerners found themselves ill prepared for the realities of waging war especially on the naval front Not only did the Confederates lack any semblance of a navy they had few raw materials with which to construct one The daunting task of building a navy fell on the shoulders of Stephen Mallory newly appointed secretary of the navy A former United States senator from Florida Mallory had resigned from office when his home state seceded from the Union and he pledged himself to the service of the Confederacy His intelligence and resourcefulness accomplished what many saw as impossible the creation of a viable combat ready southern navy Among his primary goals was the establishment of a naval academy a step which Mallory considered essential for building a serious military force In July 1863 the Confederate Naval Academy inducted its first class of cadets among which was Hubbard T Minor from the army's 42nd Tennessee regiment Focusing on the latter part of the war this work provides an in depth look at the realities of life as a cadet at the Confederate Naval Academy Beginning with an overview of the academy the book contains a brief biographical sketch of each of the school's principal instructors The main focus of the work however is the diary which Hubbard Minor kept as a cadet requirement One of only two such documents to survive it provides a day by day account of Minor's duties as well as his active service on board the CSS Savannah Events covered include the June 1864 raid on the USS Water Witch the evacuation of Savannah and the Confederate retreat to Richmond Selected letters from Minor's correspondence are inserted where chronologically relevant while introductions and other explanatory information are added only as necessary to aid the

Thomas Campbell,2019-02-15 Hampered by lack of materials shipyards and experienced shipbuilders even so the South managed to construct 34 iron armored warships during the Civil War of which the Confederate Navy put 25 into service The stories of these vessels illustrate the hardships under which the Navy operated and also its resourcefulness Except for the Albemarle no Confederate ironclad was sunk or destroyed by enemy action Overtaken by events on the ground most were destroyed by their own crews to prevent them from falling into Union hands This account covers the design and construction and the engagements of the Confederate ironclads and describes the ingenuity and courage as well as the challenges and frustrations of their too little too late service
