(Montreuil-Sur-Mer) Frank Fox,G.S.O., G H Q Montreuil Sur Mer That fantastic life at G H Q so greatly detached from the normal the life of the men whose words had power to send Armies into and out of action to give this Division rest and surcease from the agony of the struggle to assign to that Division the stress of a new effort the men into whose hands the nation poured millions without stint and at whose call the whole world moved to spin or dig or forge will it be of interest now to recall some of its memories to attempt an intimate picture of its routine Fantastic the life was truly One man of imagination who had done his work in the line so well as to win a reputation for great courage and administrative ability and had carried through with a quiet skill and a simple dutifulness the responsibilities of the small family of a regiment found when he was transferred to G H Q that the sense of responsibility was too great for his temperament He was not a very important cog of the machine But the feeling that the motion which his hand started set going so great a series of actions got on his nerves to the extent that he could neither sleep nor eat with comfort nor decide the simplest matter without torturing doubt as to whether it were right or wrong He moved on within a few days Fortunately that sense of vision was rare The average man was content to carry on with his task with what good judgment Heaven gave him deciding as the established routine or the common sense shift of a new emergency dictated But looking back reflecting on all the woeful results that might have sprung from a careless blunder from too great haste from too deliberate hesitation from over fear or over confidence it is to be seen how fantastic how abnormal was the life centred in that little walled town of Montreuil the focus of a spider s web of wires at one end of which were the soldiers in their trenches at the other the workers of the world at their benches Yet we ate drank slept played a little and talked very much as if we were workers in some commercial house directing coffee from a plantation to a warehouse and then to a breakfast table instead of dealing in blood and tears drawing without stint on human life and human hope so that the idea of Right and Liberty might be saved in the world It is well that Imagination went to sleep or was lacking For so the work could be done and the war directed to its safe conclusion But a record of the life we lived seems now in retrospect almost indecorous It is as if we should not have munched food talked trivialities while before our eyes and under our hands was played out the greatest tragedy Man has known as if it would have been more fitting if we had gone from uneasy couches tight lipped and anxious to our desks haunted always by a sense of doom The International Good Templar ,1895
