compared with sea water values Experiments with bubble produced aerosols from a Na₂PO₄ solution show that the fractionation ratio P₀₄/Na aerosol/P₀₄/Na solution is greater than 1 for all drop sizes from 0.5 to 50 microns and may be as high as 700 for 15micron drops Drops formed by the central jets of small bubbles show enrichment ratios E/F 1 below 10 which are independent of drop size while drops from the film caps of large bubbles frequently show an additional high peak log normal and centered on micron drops with a standard deviation about the geometric mean of log 1.75 It is suggested that small bubbles form an efficient surface microtome which selectively ejects only the uppermost 1 micron layer of the solution into the aerosol phase and that this selectivity is responsible for the anomalous ion ratios reported in marine precipitation
