Kaplan, Francis J.

Pirozzolo, 2013-11-11 We have had a number of interesting cases come to our attention over the years The following are illustrative of some of the issues that can emerge at the interface between neuropsychology and the law The first involved a patient suffering from a debilitating fear of heights The fear seemed a reasonable consequence of the fact that he had been a passenger on a plane that crashed while attempting take off Given that many of the passengers and crew died or were seriously injured this man was quite fortunate In fact he could be said to have lived a charmed life It had been just a year since he had been involved in an industrial accident in which he could have easily died He came away from that accident with injuries to his legs and a concussion That accident had also involved him falling from a considerable height so that there was some discussion among clinic staff about how well the patient's circumstances and symptoms fit the diagnostic category of posttraumatic stress disorder Supportive psychotherapy was used as an aid in dealing with his re ccurring memories of the plane crash and systematic desensitization was quite successful in reducing the most disruptive consequences of his fear of heights However during the course of treatment it became apparent that there were a number of problems that had not been addressed Handbook of Clinical and Experimental Neuropsychology G. Denes, Luigi Pizzamiglio, 1999 This volume is the translated and updated version of the second edition of Manuale di Neuropsicologia Zanichelli 1996 by the same authors and it reflects the current status of the art National Library of Medicine Current Catalog National Library of Medicine

Medical Neuropsychology and Behavioral Health, Syntactic Complexity Talmy Givón, Masayoshi Shibatani, 2009 Complex hierarchic syntax is considered one of the hallmarks of human language The highest level of syntactic complexity recursive embedded clauses has been singled out by some for a special status as the apex of the uniquely human language faculty evolutionary but somehow immune to adaptive selection This volume coming out of a symposium held at Rice University in March 2008 tackles syntactic complexity from multiple developmental perspectives We take it for granted that grammar is an adaptive instrument of communication assembled upon the pre existing platform of pre linguistic cognition Most of the papers in the volume deal with the two grand developmental trends of human language diachrony the communal enterprise directly responsible for fashioning synchronic morpho syntax and ontogeny the individual endeavor directly responsible for the acquisition of competent grammatical performance The genesis of syntactic complexity along these two developmental trends is considered alongside with the cognition and neurology of grammar and of syntactic complexity and the evolutionary relevance of diachrony ontogeny and pidginization is argued on general bio evolutionary grounds Lastly several of the contributions to the volume suggest that recursive embedding is not in itself an adaptive target but rather the by product of two distinct adaptive gambits the recruitment of conjoined clauses as modal operators on other clauses and the subsequent condensation of paratactic into syntactic structures
