The Law of Contempt Anthony Arlidge, David Eady, Herbert Kerrigan, 1982 This book seeks to set the Contempt of Court Act 1981 clearly in its historical context The statute makes no claim to be a complete code It amends existing law in some respects and otherwise leaves it untouched This has always been the way The law of contempt has developed piecemeal over the years often with scant regard to general principles Arlidge and Eady attempts to reduce the law governing this special jurisdiction to basic principles consonant with the common law and with the modern statutes Where as so often neither statute nor precedent provides a clear answer the authors seek to suggest one The 1981 Act applies in some respects differently to the whole of the United Kingdom For this reason Herbert Karrigan a practising advocate with experience of modern Scottish procedure and a direct involvement with the law of contempt has acted as Consulting Editor There is a separate chapter devoted to the impact of the statute on the law of Scotland and Northern Ireland Here again in relation to Scotland an attempt has been made to set the statute in its historical context Account is also taken of the European Convention on Human Rights and its likely effect on the development of the contempt jurisdiction

Arlidge, Eady & Smith on Contempt David Eady, Anthony Arlidge, A. T. H. Smith, 1999 Since the last edition of Arlidge Eady on Contempt there has been a vast amount of case law in the area of contempt The new edition has therefore been substantially updated ensuring that the book remains at the forefront of contempt law literature and now forms part of the highly respected Common Law Library Highly topical dealing as it does with the implications for journalism this book includes an analysis and comparison of the law in Scotland Fully revised and updated text dealing with the latest case law and periodical literature Chapter focusing on the constitutional dimensions including the European Convention on Human Rights Appendix contains useful precedents

The History of Contempt of Court John C. Fox (Sir), 1972 Contempt of Court Great Britain: Law Commission, 2012-08-10 The Law Commission's work on scandalising the court forms part of its wider project on contempt Work on this aspect of contempt has been brought forward to tie in with the Government's consideration of the possible abolition of the offence under the Crime and Courts Bill A well publicised case in spring 2012 highlighted the historic common law offence of scandalising the court This offence covers conduct likely to undermine the administration of justice or public confidence in the administration of justice where the conduct does not impinge on particular proceedings Scandalising the court has been defined as any act done or writing published calculated to bring a Court or a judge of the Court into contempt or to lower his authority There has not been a successful prosecution for scandalising the court in England and Wales since 1931 although it has been used more recently in other common law jurisdictions The controversy surrounding this offence is in relation to the lack of clarity about both the conduct element and the mental element the lack of clarity about the defences available the justification for retaining such an offence in a well established democracy and the compatibility of the offence with freedom of speech and the European Convention on Human Rights The consultation considers whether the current offence of scandalising the court

Contempt of Court (2) ,2014 This Law Commission report looks at the accurate contemporary reporting of the content of legal proceedings taking place in public in criminal courts More specifically this report focuses on the power of the Crown Court to order that such reporting be postponed to avoid prejudice to court proceedings The Contempt of Court Act 1981 provides that publication of material which has the effect of risking serious prejudice to active court proceedings can in some circumstances be punished as a contempt of court The Commission is concerned with all court reporting whether broadcast on television radio or over the internet or published electronically or in print format and whether by accredited press representatives or others such as bloggers The recommendations would ensure that court reporting postponement orders are all posted on a single publicly accessible website a similar website currently operates in Scotland include a further restricted service where for a charge registered users could find out the detail of the reporting restriction and could sign up for automated email alerts of new orders greatly reduce their risk of contempt for publishers from large media organisations to individual bloggers and enable them to comply with the court s restrictions or report proceedings to the public with confidence Report of the Committee on Contempt of Court Great Britain.
