Wills Law and Contests Adeyemi Oshunrinade, 2011-05-27 Wills and testament rights of inheritance and successions are all creations of civil or municipal laws and accordingly are in all respects regulated by them What speaks when you are no more is your will it is the voice that shows your intentions and from it we may determine how you want your belongings distributed among your loved ones While wills are essential most especially for a large estate not all wills are valid For a will to qualify for probate it must satisfy the demands of the law and meet the standard required for wills or else the will is nothing but a piece of paper One who leaves behind an invalid will is not different from one who died intestate without a will since the will may not be probated the default rule takes effect and all real and personal property of the decedent is distributed according to intestacy law of the jurisdiction involved It is presumed there is no will the proper thing is to set aside decedents intentions and allow the law to take his position by ensuring proper administration of the estate Contest of Wills Vincent H.
