Contingent Valuation Method In Health Care An Economic Evaluation Of Alzheimers Disease:

The Contingent Valuation Method in Health Care Sandra Nocera, Harry Telser, Dario Bonato, 2003-11-30 The Contingent Valuation Method in Health Care is offered as a contribution to improving instruments of political decision making in health care At a fundamental level it is about methodological aspects of the contingent valuation method It gives a holistic view of applying the contingent valuation method for use in policy It shows all stages of a contingent valuation study beginning with the design the choice of elicitation techniques and estimation methods for willingness to pay the use of the results in a cost benefit analysis and finally the policy implications resulting from our findings The intended audience of The Contingent Valuation Method in Health Care are health economists interested in methodological problems of contingent valuation studies people involved in health care decision making planning and priority setting as well as people interested in Alzheimer s Disease The Contingent Valuation Method in Health Care Dario Bonato, Sandra Nocera, Harry Telser, 2001

When Do the Dollars Make Sense? : Toward a Conceptual Framework for Contingent Valuation Studies in Health Care Gafni, Amiram, Bernie J. O'Brien, McMaster University. Centre for Health Economics and Policy Analysis, 1995 There is a growing interest in the application of cost benefit analysis CBA as a technique for the economic evaluation of health care programmes A distinguishing feature of CBA is that costs and benefits are expressed in the same units of value typically money A popular method for estimating money values for health care programmes is the use of willingness to pay or accept survey techniques known as contingent valuation In this paper we present a conceptual framework to help in the interpretation or design of contingent valuation studies in health care To be consistent with the theory upon which CBA is built we consider what types of questions should be asked of what populations We conclude that studies undertaking contingent valuation should distinguish between compensating and equivalent variation and recognize that respondents can be gainers or losers in utility and therefore should be asked willingness to pay or accept questions as appropriate The Demand for Health and the Contingent Valuation Method Bengt Liljas, 1997 Health Care Contingent Valuation Studies: a Review and Classification of the Literature Alan Diener, Amiram Gafni, Bernie O'Brien, McMaster University.

Centre for Health Economics and Policy Analysis,1997 Net Health Benefits Aaron A. Stinnett,1998 In recent years considerable attention has been devoted to the development of statistical methods for the analysis of uncertainty in cost effectiveness analysis with a focus on situations in which the analyst has patient level data on the costs and health effects of alternative interventions To date discussions have focused almost exclusively on addressing the practical challenges involved in estimating confidence intervals for CE ratios However the general approach of using confidence intervals to convey information about uncertainty around CE ratio estimates suffers from theoretical limitations that render it inappropriate in many situations We present an alternative framework for analyzing uncertainty in the economic evaluation of health interventions termed the net health benefits approach that is more broadly applicable and that avoids some problems of prior methods This approach offers several practical and theoretical advantages over the analysis of CE ratios is straightforward to apply and highlights some important principles in the theoretical underpinnings of CEA Economic Evaluation of Treatments for Alzheimer's Disease Linus Jönsson,2003 Contingent Valuation and Benefit Transfer Richard K. An Economic Analysis of the Market for Long-term Care Su Hyun Shin,2016 This study investigates whether or not people s financial decisions vary with information shocks about Alzheimer s disease AD and the supply of informal care supplied by children To do so I estimate economic models using data from the 1998 2010 Health and Retirement Study HRS and the 2008 2009 Simmons National Consumer Surveys NCS I find empirical evidence that the exposure to particular types of information does influence people s decisions to buy LTC insurance Specifically information about familial history of AD about costs of LTC and coverage of insurance and about family s experience with AD patients increases the probability that a person owns LTC insurance Information regarding celebrities disclosure that they have been diagnosed with AD and about general facts on the disease decreases the probability of holding LTC insurance I also find that the cumulated stock measures of information as opposed to flow measures are more appropriate to fully capture the true effects of information about AD on people s financial decisions I find strong evidence in support of Becker s Rotten Kid theorem 1974 1981 Using a two stage model I show that the probability that parents receive informal care from one of their children is negatively related to a child s cost of providing care and is positively related to the degree of reciprocity between parents and their children The estimated expected probability that a parent will receive care in the future is positively correlated with the level of savings and transfers to her child These empirical results are consistent with the hypothesis that parents strategically withhold bequests or transfer money to their children to elicit informal care from their children Economic Evaluation in Health Care Ulla Slothuus, Syddansk Universitet - Odense Universitet.
