Producing Security Stephen G. Brooks,2011-10-16 Scholars and statesmen have debated the influence of international commerce on war and peace for thousands of years Over the centuries analysts have generally treated the questions Does international commerce influence security and Do trade flows influence security as synonymous In Producing Security Stephen Brooks maintains that such an overarching focus on the security implications of trade once made sense but no longer does Trade is no longer the primary means of organizing international economic transactions rather where and how multinational corporations MNCs organize their international production activities is now the key integrating force of global commerce MNC strategies have changed in a variety of fundamental ways over the past three decades Brooks argues resulting in an increased geographic dispersion of production across borders The author shows that the globalization of production has led to a series of shifts in the global security environment It has a differential effect on security relations in part because it does not encompass all countries and industries to the same extent The book s findings indicate that the geographic dispersion of MNC production acts as a significant force for peace among the great powers The author concludes that there is no basis for optimism that the globalization of production will promote peace elsewhere in the world Indeed he finds that it has a net negative influence on security relations among developing countries underway in the region The analysis is set against a background discussion of the region's history as well as a review of the key events leading to the disintegration of the Warsaw Treaty Organization including the reformulation of Soviet security policy in the late 1980s Michta concludes with an assessment of security challenges facing the Triangle states of Poland Czechoslovakia and Hungary as they work to join Western Europe by the end of the decade He argues that the Triangle will remain in a gray security zone in Europe for the foreseeable future with an implicit security commitment from NATO but without explicit formal security guarantees

European Security and International Institutions after the Cold War Marco Carnovale, 2016-07-27 The end of the Cold War has been accompanied by renewed enthusiasm over the potential of security institutions in Europe West Europeans the US and former communist states see them as an indispensable instrument of collective security Yet institutions failed to prevent post communist conflicts most notably in Yugoslavia For the future there is a need for improved coordination among interlocking institutions This study is both a critical assessment of ongoing institutional changes and an analysis of the agenda for the future
