Book Description

Courtney is very excited. Her seventh birthday is only a few days away and her mother has planned a special party. All of Courtney's classmates will be invited. Courtney and Diana are best friends. They ride the same school bus; they sit on the same row in class; they love the same snacks. And on Saturday, they will be the same age. It has never mattered to them that one is White and one is Black. But when Courtney's mom sends the party invitations to class, Diana is not included. Both girls are devastated. With energetic prose, educator Dr. Lonetta Long, tackles a tough subject and offers a realistic treatment of a situation that is all too familiar in classrooms and communities across the U.S.
