Abstract

Contemporary urbanization differs from historical patterns of urban growth in terms of scale, rate, location, form, and function. This review discusses the characteristics of contemporary urbanization and the roles of urban planning, governance, agglomeration, and globalization forces in driving and shaping the relationship between urbanization and the environment. We highlight recent research on urbanization and global change in the context of sustainability as well as opportunities for bundling urban development efforts, climate mitigation, and adaptation strategies to create synergies to transition to sustainability. We conclude with an analysis of global greenhouse gas emissions under different scenarios of future urbanization growth and discuss their implications.

Contemporary Perspectives On Urbanization Progress In Planning S:

Contemporary Perspectives on Urbanization Francis J. C. Amos, 1996      Digital Cities II: Computational and Sociological Approaches Makoto Tanabe, Peter van den Besselaar, Toru Ishida, 2003-08-02      Self-Organization and the City Juval Portugali, 2012-12-06

Cities first came into existence more than five thousand years ago. How to deal with these partly fascinating partly frightening creatures of mankind both practically and intellectually concerns all of us and in particular presents a real challenge to city planners. Each historical epoch has had its own particular attitudes associated with the Zeitgeist. Accordingly the planning and steering of cities were based on quite different criteria. But in spite of these differences the concept of planning and steering was and still is the cornerstone of our dealing with cities. Nevertheless the planner's dilemma is becoming more and more visible: cities and megacities seem to be unplanable. In this book Juval Portugali introduces a new idea: Cities are self-organizing systems. To substantiate his revolutionary concept he uses several interlinked methods. On the one hand and to my own delight he employs in his arguments theoretical tools developed in the interdisciplinary field of synergetics. On the other hand jointly with his co-workers he has performed detailed model calculations on cellular nets. It has been a great pleasure and a wonderful experience for me to discuss these concepts with Juval Portugali over a number of years. I was repeatedly and deeply impressed by the way he established profound and often surprising links to other fields of science.

Seeking Sustainability in an Age of Complexity Graham Harris, 2007-06-14

Seeking Sustainability in an Age of Complexity explains the difficulties of sustainability and why collapse can occur. In the last twenty years the theory of complexity has been developed: complex systems science (CSS) speaks to natural systems and particularly to ecological, social and economic systems and their interaction. Due to the growing concern over the huge changes occurring in the global environment such as climate change, deforestation, habitat fragmentation and loss of biodiversity, Graham Harris sets out what has been learned in an attempt to understand the implications of these changes and suggests ways to move forward. This book discusses a number of emerging tools for the management of unruly complexity which facilitate stronger regional dialogues about knowledge and values which will be of interest to ecologists, sociologists, economists, natural resource managers and scientists in State and local governments and those involved in water and landscape management.

This publication examines the realities faced by urban populations around the world, focusing on the impact of globalisation and the way cities are governed and planned, on the make-up and density of their population and on their cultures and economies. Issues considered include the impact of globalisation on urban culture, urban renewal and cultural strategies, the concept of metropolitanization, socio-economic and cultural impacts of international migration, urban poverty and homelessness, social inequality and exclusion, urban governance.
