Fragments Along the Archipelago Beth Ann Zinsli, 2014 This dissertation seeks to reconsider the medium of photography as a system of visual and aesthetic representation within the context of the contemporary Spanish Caribbean and its U S diasporas Aspects of fracture fragmentation and incoherence haunt both of the interdisciplinary areas into which this inquiry delves the history and theory of photography and Caribbean studies Comprised of discrete but interconnected case studies my project replicates the fragmented form of Antonio Ben tez Rojo s metaphorical meta archipelago and serves as a critical intervention into the history of photography via the Spanish Caribbean including its U S diasporas I consider the afterlives of Walker Evans s Havana 1933 portfolio and the photographs produced for it vernacular photographs in circulation the work of contemporary artists using photography in the Spanish Caribbean including Carlos Garaicoa Raquel Paiewonsky Karlo Andrei Ibarra and artists using photography in the U S diasporas including Abelardo Morell Scherezade Garc a and Ad l Each section is examined as a distinct photographic fragment along the archipelago of the contemporary Spanish Caribbean and its U S diasporas Throughout the project I repeatedly push against the notion that the Spanish Caribbean as a cultural designation can be bounded solely by the places where the edge of an island meets the sea Instead I expand the place of the contemporary Spanish Caribbean to include its diaspora populations in the United States and even the spaces of transit and circulation between psychic and geographic locales Similarly the diversity of the photographic case studies from or about the Spanish Caribbean that I consider through the four thematic chapters of this project gestures to the lack of homogeneity inherent in the set of images we nevertheless refer to uniformly as photography Ultimately I posit photography as a form of visuality rather than as a visual medium as such
