Contraceptive Use In Ghana The Role Of Service Availability Quality And Price:

Contraceptive Use in Ghana Raylynn Oliver, 1995 Living Standards Measurement Study Working Paper No 111 This study looks at the socioeconomic background of individual women and draws a correlation between them and the characteristics of their nearest source of family planning The study assesses the importance of the socioeconomic background and the availability price and quality of services on contraceptive use and fertility In 1969 Ghana was among the first Sub Saharan African countries to adopt a population policy Today the average distance to a source of family planning is still about three miles Population and fertility growth rates are high and contraceptive use is low The results suggest that raising levels of female schooling will also raise contraceptive use and lower female fertility particularly in rural areas However the distances between facilities and related service centers remain a binding constraint on contraceptive use among those in the sample The study also found no consistent effect on the demand for contraception or on fertility when measuring the quality of services

The Tradeoff Between Number of Children and Child Schooling Mark Montgomery, 1995 Annotation World Bank Living Standards Measurement Study No 112 Assesses evidence of a negative correlation between the number of children born and levels of child schooling by examining their determinants In many developing countries as parents have fewer children they invest more in the health education and welfare of each child This quantity quality tradeoff is vividly illustrated in the recent economic development of Southeast Asia and Latin America In Sub Saharan Africa however the existence of such a tradeoff has not been established

The few studies conducted to date reveal either no correlation or a slightly positive one whereby higher fertility rates are linked to greater schooling per child. This study examines the determinants of fertility and of child schooling in Côte d'Ivoire and Ghana to assess evidence of a tradeoff using data from three surveys conducted between 1985 and 1987. The results are mixed. In Côte d'Ivoire there is evidence of such a tradeoff in urban areas but not rural ones. In urban areas female schooling, higher income and improved child survival are associated with lower fertility and higher child schooling. In both rural and urban areas of Ghana there is a tradeoff between fertility and child schooling with higher incomes and in rural Ghana with increases in mothers schooling. The Role of the Private Sector in Education in Vietnam Paul Glewwe, Harry Anthony Patrinos, 1998. As part of the restructuring of the educational system in 1989 the Vietnamese government implemented policy changes such as promoting the establishment of people's and community educational institutions permitting the establishment of private institutions and transforming public institutions into private ones. Since Vietnam has only recently moved from a centrally planned to a market economy private schools are still relatively rare in Vietnam. This paper examines the nature of private schooling in Vietnam using data from the 1992-93 Vietnam Living Standards Survey.

Poverty Comparisons and Household Survey Design Steven Howes, Jean Olson Lanjouw, 1997-01-01. World Bank Discussion Paper No 356. The World Bank has become the world's largest lender in the health, nutrition and population (HNP) sectors, requiring the institution to seek ever greater evidence that its work is effective on the ground. This paper reviews the literature on the causes of observed changes in health and fertility levels, on the evaluation of policies and on programs designed to accelerate these changes. It presents a framework that delineates the relationships between Bank activities in the HNP sectors, the characteristics of a health care system, household behavior and changes in health outcomes. The paper also describes a strategy for assessing the development effectiveness of the Bank's work in these sectors. The underlying thesis is that changes in health policy and improved outcomes depend on the demand for health services and on institutional incentives that drive health care system performance.

World in Transition: Ways Towards Global Environmental Solutions German Advisory Council on Global Change (WBGU), 2012-12-06. At the first Conference of the Parties of the Climate Convention in Berlin in Spring 1995 it became evident once again. To counteract anthropogenic climate changes individuals as well as societies have to change their way of thinking and behavior. This accounts for other areas of global environmental change as well Global trends like soil degradation loss of biological diversity water scarcity and population growth show little or no sign of improvement In fact in most areas a rapid deterioration has taken place In its latest Report the German Advisory Council on Global Change describes Ways Towards Global Environmental Solutions
