This photographic history tells the story of Coventry a bucolic New England town with a fascinating history On August 21 1741 the area west of what is now the town of West Warwick was incorporated into the Township of Coventry The railroad would traverse Coventry in the mid 1800s providing the gristmills sawmills and farmers with a quicker way to send their goods to market and to receive supplies in return Along with the railroad came the industry of harvesting wood to supply the locomotives with fuel In the mid 1900s the railroads disappeared and the mills began moving south where cotton was grown The majority of Coventry has evolved into a service town with banks retail stores pharmacies convenience stores and the like To travel to the western portion of Coventry today is like stepping back in time where life moves at a slower pace and the post office is still in the local general store The eastern portion of Washington Quidnick and Anthony has remained a busy area where businesses have replaced the mills The History of Coventry Benjamin Poole, 1852 History of North
