

Approaches to Language Typology: A Conspectus

MASAYOSHI SHIBATANI AND THEODORA BYNON

1. INTRODUCTION

The schools of language typology represented in this volume are all current and active. What unites them is a common goal and a shared scholarly tradition. They have all developed theoretical frameworks within which to account for the particular aspect of cross-linguistic variation they have selected to study, and they all have their roots in a shared European tradition of scholarship.

According to Greenberg (1974: 13), the word 'typology' gained wide currency in linguistics only after circa 1928, but the research activities that can be brought under the rubric of 'language typology' have a long history.¹ Although it is not easy to ascertain the first formulations of a research programme of language typology, the underlying assumptions that run throughout the history of language typology can be gleaned from the older passages of the nineteenth-century writings. Friedrich von Schlegel (1772–1829) was among the first linguists to propose a typological framework on the basis of morphological characteristics. In Über die Sprache und Weisheit der Indier (1808: 45), he argues for a classification in terms of the linguistic devices which languages employ in relating concepts to each other; the corresponding categories of relational meaning he terms 'additional determinants of meaning' (Nebenbestimmungen der Bedeutung):

We wish to thank Bernard Comrie for reading and commenting on an earlier version of this paper. This work was in part supported by a grant-in-aid (04301059) from the Japanese Ministry of Education, Science, and Culture to Masayoshi Shibatani.

¹ But Gabelentz (1901: 481) contains a passage in which the author explicitly christens the field 'Typologie': 'Dürfte man ein ungeboresenes Kind taufen, ich würde den Namen Typologie wählen.' (Quotation cited in Plank (1991: 421.) Curiously enough, according to Plank (1991), the first edition of Gabelentz's Die Sprachwissenschaft (1891), which Greenberg lists in his bibliography, does not contain this particular passage.)

Approaches To Language Typology:

Approaches to Language Typology Masayoshi Shibatani, Theodora Bynon, 1999 What do all languages have in common and what gives each language its individuality Language typology which has developed in response to these fundamental questions is concerned with the construction of theoretical frameworks capable of delimiting the range of possible human languages and of capturing constraints on cross linguistic variation Language typology is a major concern of all contemporary schools of linguistics yet a coherent image of the field is difficult to form because of the diversity of theoretical orientations and practical methodologies This collection brings together for the first time original contributions from major schools of typological research from the Prague School to the Generative Grammar tradition Leading scholars offer first hand accounts of the theoretical foundations and substantive findings of their particular school of thought clarifying basic assumptions which are often not explicitly stated in the literature The collection as a whole provides both a survey of the place of individual typological schools in the historiography of the subject and a comprehensive account of the present state of language typology in an international context It gives an overview of both the underlying unity of and the differences in the methods employed in the field Approaches to the Typology of Word Classes Petra M. Matthiessen, 2004 This book is intended as a systemic functional contribution to language typology both for those who would like to understand and describe particular languages against the background of generalizations about a wide range of languages and also for those who would like to develop typological accounts that are based on and embody descriptions of the systems of particular languages rather than isolated constructions The book is a unique contribution in at least two respects On the one hand it is the first book based on systemic functional theory that is specifically concerned with language typology On the other hand the book combines the particular with the general in the description of languages it presents comparable sketches of particular languages while at the same time identifying generalizations based on the languages described here as well as on other languages The volume explores eight languages covering seven language families French German Pitjantjatjara Tagalog Telugu Vietnamese Chinese and Japanese

Language Typology and Language Universals Martin Haspelmath, 2001 This series of HANDBOOKS OF LINGUISTICS AND COMMUNICATION SCIENCE is designed to illuminate a field which not only includes general linguistics and the study of linguistics as applied to specific languages but also covers those more recent areas which have developed from the increasing body of research into the manifold forms of communicative action and interaction For classic linguistics there appears to be a need for a review of the state of the art which will provide a reference base for the rapid advances in research undertaken from a variety of theoretical standpoints while in the more recent branches of communication science the handbooks will give researchers both an overview and orientation To attain these objectives the series will aim for a standard comparable to that of the leading handbooks in other disciplines and to this end will strive for comprehensiveness theoretical explicitness reliable documentation of data and findings and up to date methodology The editors both of the series and of the individual volumes and the individual contributors are committed to this aim The languages of publication are English German and French The main aim of the series is to provide an appropriate account of the state of the art in the various areas of linguistics and communication science covered by each of the various handbooks however no inflexible pre set limits will be imposed on the scope of each volume The series is open ended and can thus take account of further developments in the field This conception coupled with the necessity of allowing adequate time for each volume to be prepared with the necessary care means that there is no set time table for the publication of the whole series Each volume will be a self contained work complete in itself The order in which the handbooks are published does not imply any rank ordering but is determined by the way in which the series is organized the editor of the whole series enlist a competent editor for each individual volume Once the principal editor for a volume has been found he or she then has a completely free hand in the choice of co editors and contributors The editors plan each volume independently of the others being governed only by general formal principles The series editor only intervene where questions of delineation between individual volumes are concerned It is felt that this modus operandi is best suited to achieving the objectives of the series namely to give a competent account of the present state of knowledge and of the perception of the problems in the area covered by each volume
