China's Strategic Nuclear Weapons Expansion and Its Implications for the United States

Lindsay Wu

INTRODUCTION

China is building out its nuclear weapons force, at scale and at pace. In a short period of time, China could develop a strategic arsenal equal to those possessed by Russia and the United States. More alarmingly, the combined total forces of Beijing and Moscow could easily outnumber those of the United States and its Western allies. Worse still, China's rise as a third great nuclear power also presents a fundamental challenge to parity-based US strategic doctrines that evolved during the bipolar Cold War confrontation with the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics (USSR). So, given the grave danger, how should the United States respond at this time? Indeed, what can Washington truly do about this perilous situation, which continues to evolve as the United States and Russia maintain the terms of their 2021 five-year extension of the New START treaty while an unconstrained China continues to build?

First, the United States must complete the planned modernization of its strategic forces. The risks would become even more dire if America's capabilities were to deteriorate due to obsolescence. Second, the United States should continue to seek trilateral nuclear arms negotiations with Russia and China, even while recognizing that numerical limits will be very difficult to achieve. Third, since augmentation of the Western strategic inventory will presumptively be needed, Washington should encourage the UK and France to commit to expanding their nuclear forces as a part of a shared effort that may be less provocative to Russia and China than a solely American response.

NUCLEAR WEAPONS

Modern thermonuclear weapons use a primary fission detonation to trigger a secondary fusion explosion, a sequence that results in much larger yields than with fission alone. Whereas the World War II Little Boy and Fat Man bombs released 15 kilotons (kt) and 21 kt of TNT
