Arrazats Aubergines Inside A Languedoc Kitchen:

Arrazat's Aubergines Patrick Moon, 2014-01-28 In the sequel to Virgile's Vineyard Patrick Moon explores the world of Languedoc food and cuisine. Returning to his challenging home in southern France, Patrick could easily fill the days protecting infant vines from marauding wild boar and hiding baby truffle oaks from unscrupulous neighbours. However, the local campsite caf has just been transformed into an ambitious new restaurant, and he is intrigued by the talented young chef's determination to achieve perfection on a shoestring. Patrick soon finds himself pitching in, sleeves rolled up, to spend a year backstage and share the triumphs, disasters, and sheer hard work in a small but serious French restaurant kitchen. But will the VIP diners guess that he has never made mayonnaise before? Or that he put the wrong sauce on the starter? Not content with all this, Patrick also embarks on a wider exploration of the Languedoc's finest produce for the table, from mighty household names to eccentric peasant smallholdings. Throughout the seasons, his quest uncovers the secrets of olive oil and salt production, the mysteries of Ricard and the Roquefort caves, and the miracle of the sparkling Perrier spring. He even finds time to visit some of the region's top chefs for more behind-the-scenes discoveries. But there are always the vines and olives, not to mention aubergines, demanding attention at home. First published in 2005, Arrazat's Aubergines, Patrick's second book, is a great stand-alone read for any Francophile food lover or armchair chef, deploying a colourful cast of entertaining characters and a rich vein of humour to deliver a wealth of fascinating information. For fans of its predecessor Virgile's Vineyard, it also continues the story of many favourite figures, including Virgile himself.

Arrazat's Aubergines Patrick Moon, 2005 How exactly does a young restaurateur set up in business, and what happens when deliveries are late and there are thirty unexpected customers to feed? Returning to his challenging home in the Languedoc, Patrick Moon could easily fill the days protecting infant vines from marauding wild boar and hiding baby truffle oaks from unscrupulous neighbours. The local campsite cafe is, however, now an ambitious new restaurant. The determination of its talented young chef to achieve perfection on a shoestring is intriguing, and Patrick soon finds himself behind the swing doors, sharing in the triumphs, disasters, and sheer hard work of life in a serious kitchen. A wider exploration of the region's finest produce for the table distracts him further. From season to season, Patrick's quest uncovers the secrets of olive oil and salt production, the mysteries of Ricard and the Roquefort caves, the miracle of the sparkling Perrier spring. From mighty household names to eccentric peasant smallholdings, his expeditions encompass an extraordinary cast of characters and a rich vein of humour. But always there are the melons and olives and aubergines, demanding attention at home.

Essentially Aubergines Nina Kehayan, 2003-08-01 There is something very appealing about the shiny deep purple of the aubergines most commonly seen in our supermarkets and markets. But not all aubergines are purplish-black, and although the aubergine has come to epitomise Mediterranean cooking, it is in fact an Asian immigrant from China. So depending on where you travel, you can find aubergines in varying shapes, sizes, and hues. They may be lilac, verging on pink, green-tinged, or pure ivory, hence their American name.
