

Jurisdiction of the Arbitration tribunal, Section 16 of the Arbitration and Conciliation Act, 1996

HISTORICAL BACKGROUND:

The Arbitration and Conciliation Act of 1996 gives the parties a great deal of latitude in decisions like where to hold the arbitration, how many arbitrators to appoint, whom to appoint, etc. They are even free to choose which issues they want to bring before the arbitral tribunal of their choosing.

Arbitration was created as a solution to the issues that arise during the civil litigation process in courts. The Bengal rules of 1772 and 1780 marked the first application of the arbitrariness principle under British rule. In 1940, the Arbitration Act was also passed. In India, the earliest version was the panchayat. But over time, it became apparent that the 1940 Arbitration Act was inadequate to meet the needs of a rapidly modernising India. The Arbitration and Conciliation Act succeeded it in 1996 as a result.

WHAT IS ARBITRATION AND THE ROLE OF AN ARBITRATOR?

A more formal version of ADR called arbitration comprises a tribunal process and an impartial adjudicator who hears arguments from both sides before rendering a verdict. The Arbitration and Conciliation Act, 1996 states in Section 2(1)(a) that "Arbitration means any arbitration, whether or not administered by the permanent arbitral institution." In other words, by putting arbitration under the purview of the Arbitration and Conciliation Act, of 1996, all forms of arbitration, regardless of their nature, have been statutorily recognized in India. It consists of a streamlined trial with streamlined evidence procedures and no discovery. Typically, the results of arbitration sessions are not made public.

ROLE OF AN ARBITRATOR:

An arbitrator is a chosen impartial third party with knowledge of managing the arbitration procedure. A single arbitrator or a panel of three arbitrators usually sits on the tribunal that oversees the arbitration process.

They will listen to both sides before making a decision, playing a role equivalent to that of a judge. They will, however, also promote constructive rather than combative dialogue. Although there are no particular requirements to serve as an arbitrator, some legal background and business expertise are helpful if the disagreement involves technological issues.

Focusing on practical principles and guidelines, this book covers everything a prospective international commercial arbitrator or lawyer wishing to start an arbitration practice should know about conducting an arbitration in Asia. Previously, the book concentrated solely on arbitration in Hong Kong, but this second edition is significantly expanded to cover Mainland China, Japan and Singapore as well. In addition to this expansion, the content has been updated to cover new conventions, the latest statutory amendments, revised arbitral institution rules and new or updated soft law instruments. The second edition also reflects major changes since the first edition, including the greater use of online hearings for the conduct of arbitrations since COVID-19, the prevalence of sanctions and countersanctions constraining what cases arbitrators can or cannot accept, and the consequences of an increased awareness of climate change considerations. Along the way, the book considers the impacts of generative AI, third-party funding, enhanced data protection and privacy regimes and developments in other modes of alternative dispute resolution (ADR).
