The Theoretical Lateral Motions of an Automatically Controlled Airplane Subjected to a Yawing-moment Disturbance Frederick H. Imlay, 1941 The lateral motion resulting from a disturbance of the type produced by asymmetric loss of thrust has been determined for a hypothetical average airplane equipped with an automatic pilot Plots of the resultant motion and the various modes that constitute the motion are presented for controls fixed and for various amounts of automatic control The automatic control is assumed to be of a type that produces aileron deflections proportional to the angle of bank and rudder deflections proportional to the angle of azimuth The use of an automatic control may introduce either of two modes The first mode is primarily a rolling oscillation the second is a poorly damped long period oscillation in azimuth and bank The motion following any change in trim causes the airplane to reach a state of equilibrium on a different flight heading from that existing before the disturbance and the airplane assumes a new flight attitude

The Drag of Airplane Radiators with Special Reference to Air Heating (comparison of Theory and Experiment) B. Göthert, 1939 This report contains a survey of past radiator research This report also is intended as a systematic comparison of theoretical and experimental radiator drag with the object of ascertaining the most important loss sources and their interaction in different cases of installation and to separate the radiator systems which are amenable to calculation both as regards axial flow and drag The sources of loss due to the diffuser are to be looked into closely as in many cases they can be of preeminent magnitude and their customary appraisal according to Fliegner's formula does not meet actual conditions Besides generally applicable equations and charts are developed for the rapid determination of the heating effect of radiators as regards flow and drag and then checked by routine tests on hot radiators
