A Guest at the Ludlow Bill Nye, 2020-04-13 We are stopping quietly here taking our meals in our rooms mostly and going out very little indeed When I say we I use the term editorially We notice first of all the great contrast between this and other hotels and in several instances this one is superior In the first place there is a sense of absolute security when one goes to sleep here that can not be felt at a popular hotel where burglars secrete themselves in the wardrobe during the day and steal one s pantaloons and contents at night This is one of the compensations of life in prison Here the burglars go to bed at the hour that the rest of us do We all retire at the same time and a murderer can not sit up any later at night than the smaller or unknown criminal can You can get to Ludlow Street Jail by taking the Second avenue Elevated train to Grand street and then going east two blocks or you can fire a shotgun into a Sabbath school You can pay five cents to the Elevated Railroad and get here or you can put some other man's nickel in your own slot and come here with an attendant William Marcy Tweed was the contractor of Ludlow Street Jail and here also he died He was the son of a poor chair maker and was born April 3 1823 From the chair business in 1853 to congress was the first false step Exhilarated by the delirium of official life and the false joys of franking his linen home every week and having cake and preserves franked back to him at Washington he resolved to still further taste the delights of office and in 1857 we find him as a school commissioner
