

A guide to faculty development

Practical Advice, Examples, and Resources

Katy Hart Gossage, Editor

Linda R. Hansen & Emily C. Woodbury, Associate Editors

Prepared under the auspices of The Professional and Organizational Development (POOD) Network in Higher Education, this book is a fundamental resource for faculty developers, as well as for faculty and administrators interested in promoting and enhancing faculty development within their institutions. Based on POOD's classic volumes, A Handbook for New Practitioners, this new book offers up-to-date and relevant information on a range of faculty development topics, including:

- Setting up a faculty development program, including discussions of options, program types, and ten principles of good practice in creating and sustaining centers
- Assessing teaching practices, the evaluation process, individual consultation, classroom observation, and small group instructional diagnosis
- Offering a range of programs and services with focuses on promoting your programs, staging successful workshops, producing newsletters, using technology, and creating a positive classroom climate
- Reaching specific audiences such as department chairs and peer teachers
- Using problem-based learning
- Addressing diversity issues, including multicultural faculty development activities and diversity in the classroom
- Establishing a successful faculty development committee

Katy Hart Gossage is Professor Emerita, Colorado State University, and an independent consultant, CTE Associates-Higher Education Development.

Linda R. Hansen is a doctoral student in Instructional Development Service, University of Minnesota, Duluth.

Emily C. Woodbury is Dean Emerita, McHenry County College.
