Thirteen Months of Sunshine Valerie McKee, 2022-11-30 Ethiopians have not completely put that historical famine of Live Aid times behind them and they struggle to understand or to keep up with the Western world including their ever advancing technology Education there is seen as a key to success but balancing developments alongside embedded tribal and superstitious beliefs is not easy At least now schools have moved from drawing in the dust under a shady tree into purpose built structures with or without resources It was into this environment Valerie was placed when following the dramatic changes in her circumstances she made her momentous decision to put her comfortable English life on hold and to replace it with a year in that developing country At 58 not only did she use her life skills and teaching experience in the northern town of Mekelle but she lived through a potentially dangerous political time Valerie used in country transport to visit some amazing places which included her medal winning run in Addis Ababa Partly to record every little detail but also to maintain some sort of sanity she kept a detailed diary throughout that roller coaster year This book gives the reader a combination of an entertaining personal read of diariied key events alongside her own Ethiopian life with its water conservation frugal diet wind dust and much more Valerie records an honest and sometimes harrowing insight into the little known everyday existence of Ethiopians
