Mouritsen, 2012-12-06 The development of a proper description of the living world today stands as one of the most significant challenges to physics A variety of new experimental techniques in molecular biology microbiology physiology and other fields of biological research constantly expand our knowledge and enable us to make increasingly more detailed functional and structural descriptions Over the past decades the amount and complexity of available information have multiplied dramatically while at the same time our basic understanding of the nature of regulation behavior morphogenesis and evolution in the living world has made only modest progress A key obstacle is clearly the proper handling of the available data This requires a stronger emphasis on mathematical modeling through which the consistency of the adopted explanations can be checked and general principles may be extracted As an even more serious problem however it appears that the proper physical concepts for the development of a theoretically oriented biology have not hitherto been available Classical mechanics and equilibrium thermodynamics for instance are inappropriate and useless in some of the most essential biological contexts Fortunately there is now convincing evidence that the concepts and methods of the newly developed fields of nonlinear dynamics and complex systems theory combined with irreversible thermodynamics and far from equilibrium statistical mechanics will enable us to move ahead with many of these problems
