

Temperature – biomembranes

Biomembranes consist of a phospholipid bilayer with peripheral and integral membrane proteins. Lipids exist in a 'crystal state' (not fluid or solid). Structural balance can easily be upset by changes in temperature. Living cells exhibit HOMEOVISCOUS ADAPTATION (maintain 'moderately fluid' state).

How does adaptation occur?

By varying the fatty acid composition of the lipids, short chain and unsaturated fatty acids are more 'fluid'. Cholesterol also affects HVA by increasing membrane order, and affecting permeability and phase behaviour.

Adaptive maintenance of HV state.

Fatty acid composition of membranes relates to the ambient temperature experienced. Can be species and diet dependant.

Thermal adaptation of biomembranes.

- Fluidity of brain membranes measured over a range of temperatures
- At a given water temperature, icefish membranes were the most 'fluid' and avian and mammalian membranes were the most 'ordered'.
- At the measured T_b for each species, membrane fluidity is similar
- This suggests an optimum fluidity range for membrane function

Biomembranes Pt C:

Modelling of Complex Signals in Nerves Jüri Engelbrecht, Kert Tamm, Tanel Peets, 2021-05-11 This book describes fundamental physical principles together with their mathematical formulations for modelling the propagation of signals in nerve fibres Above all it focuses on the complex electro mechano thermal process that produces an ensemble of waves composed of several components besides the action potential These components include mechanical waves in the biomembrane and axoplasm together with the temperature change Pursuing a step by step approach the content moves from physics and mathematics to describing the physiological effects and finally to modelling the coupling effects The assumptions and hypotheses used for modelling as well as selected helpful concepts from continuum mechanics are systematically explained and the modelling is illustrated using the outcomes of numerical simulation The book is chiefly intended for researchers and graduate students providing them with a detailed description of how to model the complex physiological processes in nerve fibres
