(U.S.), 1971 Affect Regulation and the Origin of the Self Allan N. Schore, 2012-08-06 During the past decade a diverse group of disciplines have simultaneously intensified their attention upon the scientific study of emotion This proliferation of research on affective phenomena has been paralleled by an acceleration of investigations of early human structural and functional development Developmental neuroscience is now delving into the ontogeny of brain systems that evolve to support the psychobiological underpinnings of socioemotional functioning Studies of the infant brain demonstrate that its maturation is influenced by the environment and is experience dependent Developmental psychological research emphasizes that the infant s expanding socioaffective functions are critically influenced by the affect transacting experiences it has with the primary caregiver Concurrent developmental psychoanalytic research suggests that the mother s affect regulatory functions permanently shape the emerging self s capacity for self organization Studies of incipient relational processes and their effects on developing structure are thus an excellent paradigm for the deeper apprehension of the organization and dynamics of affective phenomena This book brings together and presents the latest findings of socioemotional studies emerging from the developmental branches of various disciplines It supplies psychological researchers and clinicians with relevant up to date developmental neurobiological findings and insights and exposes neuroscientists to recent developmental psychological and psychoanalytic studies of infants The methodology of this theoretical research involves the integration of information that is being generated by the different fields that are studying the problem of socioaffective development neurobiology behavioral neurology behavioral biology sociobiology social psychology developmental psychology developmental psychoanalysis and infant psychiatry A special emphasis is placed upon the application and incorporation of current developmental data from neurochemistry neuroanatomy neuropsychology and neuroendocrinology into the main body of developmental theory More than just a review of several literatures the studies cited in this work are used as a multidisciplinary source pool of experimental data theoretical concepts and clinical observations that form the base and scaffolding of an overarching heuristic model of socioemotional development that is grounded in contemporary neuroscience This psychoneurobiological model is then used to generate a number of heuristic hypotheses regarding the proximal causes of a wide array of affect related phenomena from the motive force that drives human attachment to the proximal causes of psychiatric disturbances and psychosomatic disorders and indeed to the origin of the self

Amine Oxidases and Their Impact on Neurobiology Peter Riederer, Moussa B.H. Youdim, 2013-03-13 The Amine Oxidase Workshop was the brain child of Brian Callingham and Keith Tipton The present book is the proceedings of the fourth in the series and in the past we have dedicated our meeting to individuals who have made significant fundamental contributions to the biochemistry physiology and pharmacology of this interesting group of enzymes The present meeting is not an exception because we have gathered here in Wtitzburg to honour an individual whose outstanding work on the autonomic pharmacology has spanned more than 30 years and whose contribution has made a vast impact in our understanding of the kinetic relationship between amine metabolism that uptake and enzymatic inactivation and adrenergic neurotransmission We speak of course of Professor Ullrich Trendelenburg or Ulli as he likes to be known Like the amine oxidases he has a unique place in Pharmacology Professor Trendelenburg was born on the eve of the new year of 1922 in the city of Rostock in northern Germany where his father was Professor of Pharmacology at the Faculty of Medicine of Rostock His father accepted the offer to take over the corresponding chair in Freiburg im Breisgau in Southern Germany As the youngest of four children Ulli grew up mainly in the garden of the department in the animal quarters and in the workshop Of the various coworkers of his father one he liked especially was Otto Kraye the young pharmacologist

Neurobiology of Aging J. Ordy, 2013-06-29 Aging is one of the most universal and inevitable social and scientific challenges confronting man The lives of all multicellular organisms begin with conception extend through phases of development maturity senescence and finally end in death Man is no exception but has the unique feature of a complex brain It plays an integrative role in adaptation to the physical and social environments through reflexes conditioning and more complex forms of learning The brain is a repository for both inherited and acquired information With the development of speech and the formation of symbolic language the human brain has made it possible to transmit information culturally horizontal to other members of society in addition to genetic vertical transmission to progeny This horizontal transmission which has reached its highest form in man is a powerful extension of genetic transmission The brain may provide man all that is of importance in life It has played a key role in the evolution of life by maintaining and extending the life span Many mental or intellectual capacities of man reach a peak in early adulthood remain relatively constant throughout maturity and then appear to decline during senescence Behaviorally there appears to be a decrease in sensory learning and motor functions with aging in all mammalian species As integrated adaptive control systems the brain and neuroendocrines have been closely associated with the homeostatic adaptation to environmental challenges throughout the life span Research Awards Index ,1979 Research Grants Index National Institutes of Health (U.S.).
