

FOOT REFLEXOLOGY MAPS

Reflex areas on the feet form "maps" that approximate to the body's anatomy with areas on the toes and heels, for example, reflecting the head and lower back respectively. Some reflex areas overlap, which is indicated by broken lines.

Right sole

Left sole
