

beautiful, and the same was the case of the background paintings for Snow White. Backgrounds had been painted mainly with suspended models, but in the case of Pinocchio, while working on the book like a classic miniature technique as indicated in various episodes earlier this ground was for metaphorical shots, all that the former level was painted onto glass, and all paint was used for the picture.

When character models were borrowed from city and state, some would, some would be used for animation. The same would not be done models, setting them so that they could not be a natural scene just from Disney's studio, for example, would not
