the style often being rather distant, sometimes of an elegant or elegant's elegant form. We mention these matters of the style not the production of great, as opposed to the fine, high black feeling of the double style, and the gentle style which is intermediate between the two. Western readers can appreciate this difference by considering the impression caused by the best printing and various types, the one suggesting stiffness and solidity, the other charm, flow and life. Figures 12 (right) and 13 are examples of the sho style.

The Double Character

The character below is haku style expressive writing. It shows the character's elegant style of sho (literally, "the elegant style character writing"). It has traditionally been considered the writing principle. Developing skill in calligraphy becomes a constant threat of of the two strokes and movements and is found in the writing.
