Human capital and structural transformation: Quasi-experimental evidence from Indonesia Karachiwalla, Naureen, Palloni, Giordano, This paper provides quasi experimental evidence on the long term causal effect of increases in human capital on participation in agriculture We use variation in male educational attainment generated by Indonesia's Sekolah Dasar INPRES program one of the largest ever school building programs Consistent with the first evaluation Duflo 2001 we find that males exposed to a higher program intensity have improved measures of human capital as adults We then show that treated cohorts are more likely to be employed outside of agriculture particularly in industry and less likely to be agricultural workers Then exploiting variation in exposure across adjacent districts we demonstrate that higher INPRES intensity in neighboring districts

decreases non agricultural employment and earnings consistent with cross district spillovers mediating the total impacts Together the results suggest that government investment in human capital can have profound effects on the rural economy and may help to accelerate shifts away from agriculture

The Window of Opportunity: Pre-Pregnancy to 24 Months of Age D. J. P. Barker, R. L. Bergmann, P. L. Ogra, 2008-07 There is no longer any doubt that the inherited genetic constitution of the individual has a large influence on the entire life cycle from human fetal development and pre and postnatal growth to subsequent health status However growing evidence suggests that this predisposition is not rigid but that early genetic imprinting caused by exposure to a diverse spectrum of nutrients macromolecules microbial agents and other cellular or soluble components present in the external environment is also of importance According to this concept of the developmental origins of adult diseases intrauterine and early life events play an important role in the etiology of human diseases there seems to exist a critical window of opportunity in the human infant before and during pregnancy and up to 24 months of age Altered exposure to different environmental agents during this critical period may determine the nature of responses in the perinatal period and the expression of specific disease states in later life The papers presented in this publication thus focus on the impact of perinatal growth nutrition environmental microflora and host immune responses on the outcome of health and disease in later life

The Case Against Christianity Michael Martin, 1991 In this systematic philosophical critique of the major tenets of Christianity Michael Martin examines the semantic and epistemological bases of religious claims and beliefs Beginning with a comparison and evaluation of the Apostles Creed the Niceno Chalcedonian Creed and the Athanasian Creed Martin discusses the principal theological historical and eschatological assumptions of Christianity These include the historicity of Jesus the Incarnation the Second Coming the Virgin Birth the Resurrection Salvation through faith in Jesus and Jesus as a model of ethical behavior Until now an adequately convincing criticism of Christianity did not exist Martin's use of historical evidence textual analysis and interpretations by philosophers and theologians provides the strongest case made to date against the rational justification of Christian doctrines
