in St Michael s Alley close by there were besides Rosee s Williams s and other coffee houses They also as we have seen had been established further west than the City and they were also as already mentioned places of rendezvous where appointments were made where lawyers met clients and doctors patients merchants their customers clerks their masters where farce writers journalists politicians and literary hacks went to pick up ideas and as it was then called watch and if they could catch the humours of the town The Spectator in his very first number acknowledges his indebtedness to coffee houses There is no place of general resort he says wherein I do not often make my appearance Sometimes I am seen thrusting my head into a round of politicians at Will s on the north side of Russell Street at the corner of Bow Street and listening with great attention to the narratives that are made in those little circular audiences Sometimes I smoke a pipe at Child s St Paul s Churchyard and whilst I seem attentive to nothing but the Postman overhear the conversation of every table in the room I appear on Sunday nights at St James s the famous Whig coffee house from the time of Queen Anne to late in the reign of George III and sometimes join the little committee of politics in the inner room as one who comes there to hear and improve
