

One winter, we who worked at the Park Visitor Center were lucky to have a barred owl frequenting the Big Meadows area. We spent many long, nearly visitorless days scanning the meadow, looking for the owl. We would watch it swoop down, catch its prey, and land in a prominent dead juniper tree.

Throughout late fall and into early spring, I often saw barred owls perched in trees along the Skyline Drive as I traveled home in the evenings. Come summer these road sightings were rare. Barred owls prefer wet or swampy habitats, though you may see them in other places in the Park. Look and listen for them at Elkswallow and in Thornton and Walkers Hollows, Meadow Springs, the Lumberlost, Big Meadows Swamp, Ivy Creek, and Jones Run.

Though you might hear barred owls during the day, they're nocturnal animals, and are more likely to call at night. "Who-coos-for-YOU," "who-coos-for-YOU-all?" is the familiar hoot of these brown-eyed owls. I have even tried (with limited success) to converse with them. I admit I felt silly standing in the forest asking this unlikely question of the treetops, but I quickly forgot my embarrassment on the few pleasant occasions I received an answer.

This superb silent hunter feeds largely on mice but enjoys a varied menu that includes chipmunks, flying squirrels, opossums, rabbits, bats, small birds (including other smaller owls), frogs, crayfish, snakes, and salamanders, all abundant in Shenandoah. The barred owl's favorite nest sites are in cavities of mature or dead trees.
