

Price Changes and Shifts in Demand of Other Goods

- A change in the price of one good can shift the demand for another good.
- For example, a decrease in the price of butter (L_2 to L_1 to L_3) causes a decrease in the quantity demanded of margarine without a change in the price of margarine
- Thus, in this example a decrease in the price of butter causes the demand for margarine to shift to the left

- The effect of the change in the price of one good on the demand for a second good will depend on whether they are substitutes or complements (or neither in case there are more than two goods that we are considering).
- Substitutes: a decrease in P_1 leads to a leftward shift in the demand for P_2
- Complements: a decrease in P_1 leads to a rightward shift in the demand for P_2
