Art in Wales Eric Rowan, Welsh Arts Council, 1985 This is the first major study of the fine arts in Wales during the modern period a pioneering expedition into territory that has been neglected by the wider world of scholarship It is therefore presented as a broad survey rather than a detailed history bringing together hitherto unrelated individuals and events to give a coherent account of the evolution of modern art in Wales Using a wealth of illustrations the author argues that there is no case for an autonomous School of Wales His theme is that from a stagnant back water Welsh art has developed into a vigorous tributary to the mainstream of Western art This luxuriously produced volume tells the story of those outstanding artists working in Wales and outside Wales who by their collective efforts have made modern Welsh art a subject in its own right
