The History of the Confederate War, Its Causes and Its Conduct, Vol.2 (of 2) George Cary Eggleston, To be continue from Volume 1

In the meantime great events were occurring which were in some respects more important in their bearing on the war than battles would have been. In these events the war recognized itself and adapted itself to its conditions. From the beginning the abolitionists had clamorously and ceaselessly demanded of Mr Lincoln that he should recognize the actual cause of the war by proclaiming freedom for the slaves at the South. There was no doubt in anybody's mind that the war was simply the culmination of that irrepressible conflict between the systems and sentiments of free and slave labor which had constituted the burden of the country's history for nearly half a century. If there had been no slavery there would have been no war. It is true that a very large proportion of the Southern people regretted slavery, deprecated its existence and earnestly desired to be rid of it. It is also true that the great mass of the Southerners were non slaveholders and that their fighting was done not for the perpetuation of that institution in which they had no interest but in assertion of those reserved rights of the individual states upon the maintenance of which they sincerely believed that the liberty of the people depended. These people desired to take their states out of the Union not for the sake of slavery but for the sake of that right of local self government which they regarded as the fundamental condition of liberty among men. On the other hand a large proportion of the Northern people cared little or nothing about slavery; many of them even approving the institution as the only practicable arrangement under which blacks and whites could live peaceably together and as a condition eminently proper for the incapable black man. But these believed in the maintenance of the Union as a condition of liberty and progress and were ready to sacrifice their lives and their possessions in behalf of that end. Nevertheless it was clear from the beginning that in the last analysis the war involved as its issue the maintenance of slavery or the destruction of that system root and branch. Personally Mr Lincoln hated slavery and very earnestly desired its extermination. But as he reminded those who beset him with unsolicited advice he was restrained by his oath of office while they were free to advocate any principle or policy that might seem good in their eyes. Moreover he had upon him the tremendous task of preserving the Union and in aid of that supreme purpose he was ready to sacrifice all other considerations of what kind soever. In answer to an impassioned appeal from Horace Greeley in August 1862 Mr Lincoln set forth his attitude in these words: My paramount object is to save the Union and not either to save or destroy slavery. If I could save the Union without freeing any slave I would do it. If I could save it by freeing all the slaves I would do it. And if I could do it by freeing some and leaving others alone I would also do that. At the beginning Mr Lincoln had clearly seen the necessity of winning all the support he could to his war measures. He had seen that while practically the whole population of the North would stand by him in a war for the preservation of the Union there must be a very great and dangerous defection should he make the war one for the extirpation of slavery in those states in which the institution existed under protection of the Federal Constitution By thus resolutely refusing to make the war a crusade against slavery and declaring as he did in his official utterances that it was no part of his purpose to interfere with the domestic institutions of any state Mr Lincoln had drawn to his support a vast body of influential citizens who would otherwise have opposed and whose influence was great enough perhaps if it had been offended to have robbed him of the means of restoring the disrupted Union Had he adopted the policy Ghosts of the Confederacy Gaines M. Foster,1987 Through an examination of memoirs personal papers and postwar Confederate rituals this book explores how white southerners interpreted the Civil War accepted defeat and readily embraced reunion and a New South It reveals that while the Lost Cause was a central force in shaping late 19th century southern culture the legacy of defeat ultimately had little impact on southern behavior

Casdorff,2021-12-14 Richard Stoddert Ewell is best known as the Confederate General selected by Robert E Lee to replace Stonewall Jackson as chief of the Second Corps in the Army of Northern Virginia Ewell is also remembered as the general who failed to drive Federal troops from the high ground of Cemetery Hill and Culp s Hill during the Battle of Gettysburg Many historians believe that Ewell s inaction cost the Confederates a victory in this seminal battle and ultimately cost the Civil War During his long military career Ewell was never an aggressive warrior He graduated from West Point and served in the Indian wars in Oklahoma Kansas New Mexico and Arizona In 1861 he resigned his commission in the U S Army and rushed to the Confederate standard Ewell saw action at First Manassas and took up divisional command under Jackson in the Shenandoah Valley Campaign and in the Seven Days Battles around Richmond A crippling wound and a leg amputation soon compounded the persistent manic depressive disorder that had hindered his ability to make difficult decisions on the battlefield When Lee reorganized the Army of Northern Virginia in May of 1863 Ewell was promoted to lieutenant general At the same time he married a widowed first cousin who came to dominate his life often to the disgust of his subordinate officers and he became heavily influenced by the wave of religious fervor that was then sweeping through the Confederate Army In Confederate General R S Ewell Paul D Casdorff offers a fresh portrait of a major but deeply flawed figure in the Confederate war effort examining the pattern of hesitancy and indecisiveness that characterized Ewell s entire military career This definitive biography probes the crucial question of why Lee selected such an obviously inconsistent and unreliable commander to lead one third of his army on the eve of the Gettysburg Campaign Casdorff describes Ewell s intriguing life and career with penetrating insights into his loyalty to the Confederate cause and the Virginia ties that kept him in Lee s favor for much of the war Complete with riveting descriptions of key battles Ewell s biography is essential reading for Civil War historians

Among the top physicians of the Confederacy Christopher H Tebault distinguished himself as a surgeon during the Civil War Recognized for his medical contributions after the war he was nominated Surgeon General of the United Confederate Veterans a position he used to compile the history of Confederate medicine advocate for veterans and contribute to Southern literature A staunch Lost Cause proponent he also fought Reconstruction policies and the enfranchisement of former slaves Drawing on his own writings this first biography of Tebault describes his notable medical education in New Orleans and the ingenuity he used to treat wounds and illness as well as his struggles against Reconstruction policies situating his story in the problematic context of Confederate history that persists today Matt W. Ransom, Confederate General from North Carolina Clayton Charles Marlow,2006-07-19 On May 8 1861 Matt Ransom resigned from the North Carolina House of Commons and accepted a commission as a Confederate officer Like many North Carolinians Ransom had been reluctant to see his state leave the Union though he owned slaves at the onset of the war he strongly believed that slavery was a doomed institution However the action at Fort Sumter South Carolina had made his course of action all but inevitable Despite the fact he was without military experience or training Ransom saw it as his duty to join the Confederate forces He left behind a young family and courageously fought Union forces until the end of the war his brigade was present at Appomattox for

Robert E Lee s surrender He was twice wounded in battle and was widely recognized as an effective and highly competent leader by enlisted men and officers alike After the war he returned to his beloved North Carolina and following considerable hardship rebuilt his plantation *Confederate Military History: Parker, W.
