THE SCIENCE OF LIFE

What is Biology?

Biology is the study of life and living organisms. It is a branch of science that deals with the characteristics, functions, and interactions of living organisms. Biology is a vast field that encompasses a wide range of topics, from the study of individual cells to the study of entire ecosystems. It is a dynamic and ever-changing field that continues to expand our understanding of the natural world.

Characteristics of Life

Living organisms exhibit several key characteristics that distinguish them from non-living matter. These characteristics include the ability to grow, reproduce, respond to the environment, and maintain a stable internal environment. All living organisms are made of cells, which are the basic units of life. Cells are organized into tissues, organs, and systems, which work together to perform the functions necessary for life. The study of these characteristics and how they relate to the structure and function of living organisms is the core of biology.

Cells: The Basic Unit of Life

Cells are the smallest units of life that can perform all the functions necessary for life. They are the building blocks of all living organisms. Cells are organized into tissues, organs, and systems, which work together to perform the functions necessary for life. The study of cells and how they function is the foundation of biology.

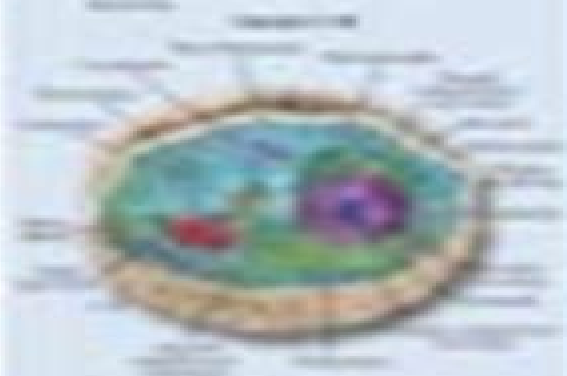

Plant cells are eukaryotic cells, meaning they have a nucleus and other membrane-bound organelles. They are typically rectangular in shape due to the presence of a cell wall. The central vacuole is a large, clear structure that takes up most of the cell's volume. The nucleus is a smaller, darker structure that contains the cell's genetic material. Other organelles like mitochondria and chloroplasts are also present.

Animal cells are also eukaryotic but lack a cell wall and a large central vacuole. They are more rounded in shape. The nucleus is still present, and mitochondria are used for energy production. The cell membrane is the outer boundary of the cell.

Prokaryotic cells are simpler in structure than eukaryotic cells. They lack a nucleus and other membrane-bound organelles. The genetic material is contained in a single circular chromosome. Bacteria and archaea are examples of prokaryotic organisms. Despite their simplicity, they are capable of performing all the functions necessary for life.
