In TCM, a blood deficiency will result in a pale tongue with little or no coating. It is often associated with an iron or B12 deficient anemia.

Blood stasis is seen with a purple tongue and little black spots is associated with inflammatory conditions involving blood vessels. Often these individuals have varicose veins, Raynaud's syndrome, easy bruising and issues with oxygen diffusion into extremities.

Automated Biometrics David D. Zhang, 2013-11-11 Biometrics based authentication and identification are emerging as the most reliable method to authenticate and identify individuals. Biometrics requires that the person to be identified be physically present at the point of identification and relies on something which you are or you do to provide better security, increased efficiency and improved accuracy. Automated biometrics deals with physiological or behavioral characteristics such as fingerprints, signature, palmprint, iris, hand, voice and face that can be used to authenticate a person's identity or establish an identity from a database. With rapid progress in electronic and Internet commerce there is also a growing need to authenticate the identity of a person for secure transaction processing. Designing an automated biometrics system to handle large population identification, accuracy and reliability of authentication are challenging tasks. Currently there are over ten different biometrics systems that are either widely used or under development. Some automated biometrics such as fingerprint identification and speaker verification have received considerable attention over the past 25 years and some issues like face recognition and iris based authentication have been studied extensively resulting in successful development of biometrics systems in commercial applications. However very few books are exclusively devoted to such issues of automated biometrics. Automated Biometrics Technologies and Systems systematically introduces the technologies and systems and explores how to design the corresponding systems with in depth discussion. The issues addressed in this book are highly relevant to many fundamental concerns of both researchers and practitioners of automated biometrics in computer and system security.

Blood on the Tongue Stephen Booth, 2003. Guilt, sacrifice and redemption in a freezing Peak District winter in this tense psychological thriller from the acclaimed author of Black Dog. A dark star may be born. Reginald Hill. It wasn't the easiest way to commit suicide. Marie Tennent seemed to have just curled up in the freezing snow on Irontongue Hill and stayed there until her body was frosted over like a supermarket chicken. And hers isn't the only death the police have to contend with either. Not after the discovery of a baby in the wreckage of an old Airforce bomber and the body of a man dumped by a roadside. As if three bodies on her hands isn't enough, snow and ice have left half of E Division out of action and Diane Fry is forced to partner DC Gavin Murfin. She and Ben Cooper were never a match made in heaven but next to Murfin working with Ben starts to look like a dream. He's on a trail of his own though and one as cold as the Peak District. January. In an equally bitter winter in 1945 an RAF bomber crashed on Irontongue Hill killing everyone except the pilot who walked away and disappeared. Now his grand daughter Alison Morrissey is in Derbyshire desperate to clear his name and Ben can't help taking an interest. But is a fifty year old mystery really the best use of police time. Or does a vicious attack in the dark Edendale backstreets prove that the trail's not quite as cold as he'd thought. Could the past be the only clue to present violence as an icy winter looks set to get even chillier.
